Quick Action Days
A Day of Prayer
The Robin's Reflection
Canned Blood for Sale

—By Arthur Brisbane—

UNDER PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT come days of "quick action." The beer bill is a beer law now, everything signed and ready, including internal revenue stamps, and many new beer glasses. Fourteen million dollars' worth of new buildings, for brewers, are now under way in New York city alone.

You may drink all the beer that is good for you not later than April 15th in all but dry states, and you may get it properly made, for five cents a glass.

President Roosevelt's farm relief measure passed the House of Representatives by a big margin, and goes to the Senate. Meanwhile, President Roosevelt is rushing his bill for relief of the idle. He asks Congress and labor groups to discuss it with him.

The suggestion that 250,000 men be employed in national forests is objected to by Chairman Connery of the House labor committee, because the suggested pay, one dollar a day, is too low a wage scale for unskilled labor.

Such low pay would be inadequate. But if the government would feed the men, as it feeds soldiers, extremely well, for about 30 cents a day, letting the men send all their earnings to their families, it would be better than nothing.

Attacks on Jews continue in Germany, according to press despatches and private information. International News supplies a photograph of a sign reading:

"I shall never again complain to the police."

He had reported that Hitler troops had beaten him. Following his compulsory walk through the streets, he was ejected from the city.

Jews complain that prominent Jews have been selected by Nazi troopers, their bodies found later riddled with bullets. Wilhelm Spiegel, a Jewish lawyer, candidate in the municipal elections, is said to have been shot down in cold blood, while Alfred Appel, another lawyer, president of the Zionist organization in Berlin, arrested after the burning of the Reichstag building, was tortured to death.

In addition, all Jewish members are dropped from the German civil service, and all Jewish employes from hospitals, health institutions and other public departments.

Three orthodox rabbinical associations of America proclaim next Monday "a day of fasting in protest against the persecutions of the Jews in Germany." The solemn fast will call attention to conditions, as will the mass meeting to be held afterward, but cannot be expected to produce much in the way of results across the ocean.

Something more energetic and nearer to Berlin, is called for.

To turn your mind from sad thoughts, consider a small robin, resident of Kansas City, Mo. He returned from somewhere 13 days ago and saw his reflection, very distinct, in an office window.

First he decided to be friendly, then became indignant. Every day for 13 days he has fought that shadow robin savagely. He heat his wings, feet and beak against the glass, is apparently not seriously injured, his courage is undiminished, and he feels that he is making headway.

A million of 123 millions that has been fighting a deep depression in much the same fashion for more than three years need not criticize that robin.

Most important to medical science is a discovery by Russians announced by Dr. Alan Hirsh, consultant of the Soviet heavy chemical trust, just returned from abroad. Human blood canned, with a slight quantity of magnesium phosphate, can be used for transfusion, after being kept for weeks.

Experimenting first with dogs, the Russian scientist made successful experiments with the blood of a man killed in Moscow. It must be blood from a living person or one just killed.

Blood transfusion is one of the most valuable forces of modern medical science, the only hope in certain cases of poisoning by strep-ococci and other infections.

Soon you may see the strange sign, "human blood for transfusion," taking you back to the remedies of mediaeval days, and Macbeth's witches.

The "Jones bill," biggest relief measure mentioned thus far, is urged by Mr. Rainey, Speaker of the House. It involves a THIRTY THOUSAND MILLION DOLLAR UNITED STATES BOND ISSUE to scale down mortgage interest rates.

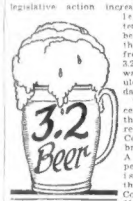
2 BREWERIES HERE GIVEN PERMITS

Legislature May Get 3.2 Bill Today for Action

With two of Boston's biggest breweries holding permits to begin immediate manufacture of 3.2 beer, legislative action increasing the legal content of the beverage in this state from 2.75 to 3.2 per cent was scheduled for today.



The concerns are the Haffenreffer and Commercial breweries. Another permit was issued to the Webb Company of New Haven.

Cl. They were issued late yesterday by the Boston branch of the U. S. Bureau of Industrial Alcohol.

AWAIT STATE ACTION

It is believed the permits are conditional on the beer legalization actions of the two states. Action must therefore be taken here before the brewers can actually go ahead although they have federal sanction.

To speed up matters in this respect the legislative committee on legal affairs is prepared to report to the Legislature today its own bill to permit brewers in the State to manufacture and bottle the 3.2% beverage.

It was pointed out that this was the only pressing legislation on the beer question here. There are still two weeks remaining in which legislation may be drafted and passed regarding the license and sale of beer in the State before the new national law becomes effective.

The bill, to be reported after the committee completes its executive session this morning, will provide for the manufacture of beer in the State in conformity with the beverage allowed in the national legislation just signed by President Roosevelt.

EMERGENCY RULE ASKED

Legislative action can also be expected within a few days to assure the licensing of beer sales in Boston and other cities and towns of the Commonwealth. The liquor control commission will amend its provisions to allow cities and towns to license beer sales in accordance

600 Miners Starving in Wage Cut Fight

Sosnowitz, Poland, March 23 (INS)—Scenes of hunger-striking miners, self-entombed far underground in the depths of the Klimontoff and Mortimer mines here, collapsed today as lack of food took its toll.

The men had been in the mines four days, while their wives, mothers and children implored them to end the strike.

Those whose health failed under the strain were sent to the surface, while 600 others remained underground, repeating they would rather starve than accept a wage cut.

U. S. PROTEST RESENTED IN GERMANY

Agitation Over Drive Against Jews Hurts Steamship Lines

By KARL H. VON WIEGAND
(Copyright, 1933, by Universal Service, Inc.)

Berlin, March 23—The wave of indignation in the United States over the treatment of Jews under the Hitler government has aroused a counter-wave of resentment against America in Germany.

Foreign Minister Von Neurath has instructed the German embassy in Washington to advise the state department the Hitler government is maintaining law and order in Germany.

Vice-Chancellor Von Papen received a cable from American friends painting in dark terms popular American feeling about the Hitler government.

Von Papen at once conferred with Prussian Minister of Interior Goering, and also telephoned Chancellor Hitler, pointing out the danger to German-American relations.

OFFICIALS ADMIT ATTACKS

As the German press fears to print what is disagreeable in the government's view, the German people are largely in ignorance of excesses against the Jews.

The German people are being misled by dispatches from some German correspondents in New York who represent American correspondents her as cabling "atrocity tales" and indulging in "lying propaganda against Germany. They also charge American newspapers with printing "faked photographs."

While some high quarters in the government profess to be wholly ignorant that anything has happened to Jewry in Germany, the foreign office makes no such excuse and frankly admits the many cases reported.

STEAMSHIP MEN ALARMED

The foreign office is greatly disturbed by sentiment in America and boycott movements in Holland and Switzerland.

German steamship lines, which have had the cream of transatlantic travel, are appalled at sweeping cancellations of Americans transferring to French, British, Italian and American lines. Resorts are also dismayed, inasmuch as American Jews have been among the best patrons.

The Russian embassy has lodged strong protests in two more cases of mistreatment of Russian citizens, and the Russian ambassador has been suddenly recalled to Moscow to make a personal report.

Protest Meetings in 300 American Cities

New York, March 23 (INS)—American protests against persecution of Jews in Germany assumed country-wide proportions today as plans were completed for mass meetings in 300 cities.

The largest of these will be in Madison Square Garden Monday night.

Similar protests are planned in Boston and in every other section of the country. Jewish leaders here announced. Everywhere, they said, the indignation aroused by the Hitler government's anti-Jewish activities was shared almost equally by Catholic and Protestant leaders and American Jewry.

SMITH TO BE SPEAKER

The American Federation of Labor, with a membership of 3,000,000 persons, practically every race and creed, has joined in the protest movement. William Green, president of the organization, has agreed to address the mass meeting at Madison Square Garden. Other speakers will be former Governor Alfred E. Smith, Bishop William T. Manning, Senator Robert F. Wagner, Bishop

AUTO GOES IN RIVER; HUNT FOR BODIES

Charles Dragged for Supposed Victims of Accident

The plunge of a sedan into the Charles River from a section of Soldiers Field rd., in back of Braves Field, early today, brought police with grappling irons in the belief that one or more occupants of the car may have drowned.

The machine, which had been reported stolen in Roxbury last night, is owned by Joseph di Bonna of Washington st., Brighton.

The top of the auto was sighted in the river by Patrolmen Edward Connolly and J. Frank Keaney while driving a cruising car from the Speedway Station of the Metropolitan police.

They flashed word to police of the Charles River Basin station where grappling irons and speed boats are available for rescue work. Meanwhile, the two officers waded breast high to the side of the car in the belief that occupants might be trapped inside. The machine was empty.

Police of the Basin station grappled in the darkness over as much area as they could near the machine but found no trace of the bodies. At daylight the grappling continued.

Marks of the tires indicated the machine swerved off the road at right angles, at a time of the morning when few machines were passing that way.

The car was raised and towed to Soldiers Field rd., where it was found to be little damaged. The window on the driver's side was open but all others were closed, police said.

Police questioned Di Bonna at his home and he gave them the same report he had given Roxbury police at the time he reported the car stolen last night.

$15,000 Blaze Sweeps Dorchester Stores

Fire of an unknown origin early today wiped out several stores and offices in the two-story brick block at 547-553 Columbia rd., Dorchester, causing damage estimated at $15,000, and for a time threatened the Upham's Corner business section.

Police from the Field's Corner station saw smoke coming from the block. When the fire department arrived the building was a roaring furnace. The blaze police say, started in the rear of the Howard Cleaning Company and worked its way through to the Strand Florist shop and then to the Chinese restaurant. It broke through to the second floor where the Dorchester Dental Laboratory is located. The flames then broke through the roof. Smoke hindered the firemen and several were temporarily overcome. Police and firemen are today investigating the fire to determine the cause.

WIDOW HAD MARKED HER FOR DEATH, SAYS MATE

Mrs. Costello Planned Love Life With Him, McMahon Repeats

Mrs. Mary McMahon, whose young husband "told" on Mrs. Jessie B. Costello, accused murderess, today faced questioning for the first time in the strange death of William J. Costello, Peabody fire captain.

Reports that her death was planned to follow that of Capt. Costello—part of an alleged plan of the accused widow—for a love life with Edward J. McMahon, Peabody reserve police officer, prompted the questioning, authorities admitted.

The alleged plan of the 31-year-old widow for death of her husband and McMahon's wife would have eliminated the two lawful mates who stood in the way, according to McMahon's story.

CONFESSION CHECKED

Mrs. McMahon, barely recovered from the shock of her husband's confession of secret meetings at the Costello home, must recall all past conversations she had with the now jailed widow and any talk her husband might have had in regard to the Costello family.

The young officer added the "double murder plot" details to the amazing confession of Dave Dyrats with Mrs. Costello, which was branded a "pack of lies" by the jailed widow.

In another statement he told of the relief he felt for "telling all" and promised authorities that he would be available for any further questioning that may be required of him in the affair case.

Investigators under the direction of Dist.-Atty. Hugh A. Cregg today checked several other phases that they anticipate will be woven into the state's charges when Mrs. Costello is placed in trial in May.

POOR CASE, SAYS DONNELL

Not the least of these is the report of a Peabody tailor that Mrs. Costello sent him a black dress for cleaning on February 13, two days before the fire captain was found dead in his bedroom from cyanide poisoning.

The tailor, Samuel Schneider, told detectives that he called with the cleaning dress at the Costello home during the excitement at the finding of the body. In view of the excitement he did not deliver the dress, but returned it to his shop, where it still remains, Schneider said.

CITY FACES A CUT OR BANKRUPTCY, SAYS SNYDER

MUST SLASH 15 MILLIONS, SAYS CHAMBER HEAD

By JOHN T. LAMBERT

Boston must slash its city expenses or go bankrupt, Frederick S. Snyder, president of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, made that dramatic statement and direful prediction today.

The cut will have to be about $15,000,000.

It will come through the reduction of wages, discharge of surplus employes, elimination of unnecessary bureaus and the abandonment of every project not utterly necessary to the maintenance of the city.

F. S. Snyder

Mayor Curley must be given unlimited authority to effect the saving even to control over the wages of police men and the school depa rtment.

Unless these drastic pro grams are put into operation at once, Mr. Snyder said, there will be all the chaos and suffering that precedes actual bankruptcy.

Homes of the people would be sold under their heads for non-payment of taxes.

There would be payless weeks for city workers, such as in Bavaria, where five months have passed since the city paymaster handed out the weekly envelope to distressed and loyal workers.

Business would stagnate. Unemployment would increase. The city would be rendered incapable of administering in its ill, aged and infirm.

This picture was painted by Mr. Snyder as he unfolded for the first time, and exclusively to the Boston Evening American, the grim behind-the-scenes story of what is taking place in the striking economy policy now being moulded for Boston by the business and banking interests in co-operation with the city officials.

"In nearly a quarter of a century under the present city charter," said Mr. Snyder, "the population has increased 16 per cent. Our debt has increased 53 per cent. The number of employes has increased 74 per cent. The per capita cost of city government has increased 160 per cent.

AUTHORITY IN BILL

"Thus we have the cost of government increasing 10 times the increase in population, and much of the increase coming in a period in which the annual income of the American people, out of which they must pay taxes, decreasing from 80 billions to 39 billions of dollars.

"We have got to stop it. When you are spending 20 per cent more than you are taking in, you are headed for bankruptcy. If you stop spending at 80 per cent and save the other 1 per cent, you are headed for the top of the heap. We have got to get away from the unhappy spectacle where we see, in one section of the city alone, 6000 homes being wrested from their owners for non-payment of taxes.

"I have had sympathy for Mayor Curley's early program. He desired a great metropolis, of modern highways, tunnels and every service of convenience that could be supplied for the people. Conditions have changed. The necessity of prosperous days becomes a reckless extravagance when people are out of work and obliged to stand in line for food and shelter. We all know and recognize this now.

FOR TWO-YEAR CUT

"The maintenance budgets of the city, the county and the schools, over which the mayor must have authority if necessary to effect the pressing economies, total about $60,000,000. A 25 per cent reduction in these costs will provide the saving of $16,000,000. This will give Boston the balanced budget. This authority is provided for the mayor in the Parkman bill, now pending in the Legislature. The mayor would be permitted to put the reductions into force in the police and school departments, over which he does not possess the authority, if the reductions were not ordered by the police commissioner and the school committee within ten days from the enactment of this law.

"I could get no joy out of a salary slash as such. I desire to see every working man and lending have the highest income possible. It must be borne in mind that the wages of public employes alone have escaped the decrease which has been necessarily put into effect in every private corporation. And it is their wages which help to maintain the high taxes to be paid by property owners, many of whom are out of work, and the rents and other expenses of tenants, who may be found searching vainly for compensatory employment.

"The purchasing power of the regularly employed city employe is 33 per cent higher than five years ago. Much of their income is exempt from taxation. We do not propose that they shall lose all of the advantage they have enjoyed. We ask that the decrease shall be but 25 per cent, and that it shall last not longer than two years, in order that none of their advantage shall be maintained. The problem is one entirely of the greatest good for the greatest number of all our citizens.

"The mayor has conceded the utter necessity of payroll reduction. He has not stated yet his willingness to discharge city employes. That question will have to be met, of course, in the spirit of co-operation among all of us who have the common welfare of the city at heart. The question will resolve itself into this: 'Can we pay out what what we can't collect?'"

Get Going, Edison Ultimatum

West Orange, N. J., March 23 (US)—Get going—do something was the proclamation of Charles Edison, son of the famous inventor today. On the bulletin boards of the Edison plants was this notice:

"President Roosevelt has done his part, now you do something.

"Buy something—buy anything; paint your kitchen, send a telegram, give a party, get a car, pay a bill, rent a flat, fix your roof, get a haircut, see a show, build a home, take a trip, get married.

"Get going and keep going. This old world is starting to move."

Sweet Adeline Queen Again

—By ARTHUR 'BUGS' BAER—

When President Roosevelt swung his monogram over the dotted line he started the great American derby for the brewer's big hosses,

Yesterday, Sweet Adeline won a beauty prize. She's Miss Universe again.

Now, all we need is a five-night week for barroom quartets and a six-hour day for bouncers.

We will miss those noble experiments of snooping, wire-tapping, back-door enforcement, entrapment, bribery, shake-downs, armed raids, purchase of evidence and excitement to violate our nation's laws.

They were truly noble tests and only needed a coat-of-arms to make them royal.

We hope the wets will not spoil the victory with excesses. But we know there will be plenty of hilarious confusion.

But that's the way we do things here. Every time the pendulum swings back and forth we get our hats knocked off.

B. U. STUDENTS RAP HITLER

Aroused by the reports of the Jewish persecutions by Nazis in Germany, students at Boston University, both Jews and Gentiles, have organized an association through which, by concerted action, they hope to present to Chancellor Hitler an impressive statement of the feeling of American youth.

The founder of the club, Harold Levenson of Brookline, has contacted other colleges and universities and has made arrangements for the affiliation of his student organization with great chain which will represent the cross section of American youth.

"No civilized person, whether he be of the Jewish religion or not, is able to stand by and watch the outrages that Hitler is sponsoring in Germany," Levenson said. "The members of these clubs have no false hopes of what they will be able to do in the matter. We do feel, however, that by proper action here and by concerted co-operation, we can impress upon Hitler that young America is solidly against his actions.

Farm Relief Faces Delay by Doubting Senate

Washington, March 23 (INS)—The administration's far-reaching farm relief bill, which passed the House by the overwhelming vote of 315 to 98, will be subjected to more careful scrutiny by a somewhat doubtful Senate.

Senator Smith (D) of South Carolina, chairman of the agriculture committee, today announced he will open hearings with the expectation of simplifying it.

Administration leaders discounted reports that the Senate would completely rewrite the bill. They pointed to the huge House vote as an answer to critics who predicted the bill would be bogged down in that body.

MORE PLANNED

Congress, however, it was generally admitted, found more common ground in the announcement of President Roosevelt that legislation would be submitted for relief of farm and city home owners who are burdened with mortgages.

During debate in the House reference to mortgage relief aroused enthusiasm, and prompt passage of a measure is promised as soon as it is submitted to Congress.

The administration plan was still in process though Speaker Rainey said one of the plans being considered is the issuance of government bonds in exchange for farm and city home mortgages.

TO FLOAT BONDS

Rainey estimated the issuance of bonds might reach $30,000,000,000, but Chairman Jones (D) of Texas, of the agriculture committee, author of the bill, said that five billions would do the job.

Senate opposition to the farm relief bill centered chiefly about the dictatorial powers granted to Secretary of Agriculture Wallace to license food handlers, who would pay a tax.

Smith said he hoped to work out a simplified plan of licensing, so there would be no danger that the secretary's authority would extend to licensing a corner grocery.

The processing tax, estimated to yield a billion dollars a year, would be used to lease land or make direct grants to farmers for reduction of their production, to raise prices.

DAD, GONE 40 YEARS, HUNTED

Somewhere, perhaps, there is an old man who has seen his children grow up around him, all except a little boy. He had vanished very much and who vanished from his life 40 years ago.

Somewhere, this old man may be praying and hoping to see that little girl again.

The golden haired girl, now a middle aged woman, is living in Roxbury. She, too, has hoped and prayed for 40 years that she might some day be reunited with her father.

She is Almeda Fournier. She asks the readers of the Boston American to help find her father, George Fournier. Her present home is 28 Alpine st., Roxbury.

"Forty years ago," she said, "my mother, who was Emma Graham, an actress, took me with her to Chicago to the World Fair. I remember my father, and I remember that he lived near the clay pits in North Cambridge. My mother left me in a school in Chicago, and I never heard from her or my father again.

"Surely, there must be someone who remembers my father. I would like to see him again. My efforts have been fruitless, because when I was taken from home I did not even know my last name.

"My father was French. He lived in the French settlement in North Cambridge. If there is anyone who can give me any information about him, I would appreciate it greatly."

Connery Leads Opposition at Conference in White House

Washington, March 23 (INS)—Passage of President Roosevelt's unemployment relief program of reforestation at an early date was foreshadowed today, following a two-hour conference last night at the White House, although Rep. Connery (D) of Massachusetts, chairman of the House committee on labor, announced he could not support the bill in its present form.

Connery had succeeded in forcing joint hearings in House and Senate, on the bill which would authorize the employment of an army of men at a dollar per day and found.

The White House conference to which House and Senate leaders of the labor committee were invited was preceded by one attended by four members of the cabinet, Secretary of Labor Perkins, Secretary of War Dern, Secretary of Agriculture Wallace and Secretary of the Interior Ickes. They later sat at the conference with congressional leaders.

WALSH STATEMENT

Despite Connery's opposition, Senator Walsh (D.) of Massachusetts, chairman of the Senate Committee on Labor, predicted support for the measure. Walsh said:

"The bill will be enacted substantially as recommended next week, there is no doubt.

"The President gave a clear and interesting statement. He had his heart set on the undertaking as one that will employ a large number of persons to the benefit of themselves and the nation.

"He hopes the states and private owners of timberlands will follow the example of the federal government in this respect."

Those attending the conference included: Senators LaFollette (R.) of Wisconsin, Copeland (D.) of New York, Black (D.) of Alabama and Walcott (R.) of Connecticut, besides Walsh and Connery.

CONNERY'S OBJECTIONS

Connery objected to the dollar per day wage and suggested it be increased to $50 monthly for single men and $80 monthly for married men. He opposed use of the word "select" in the section which would allow the President to recruit members for the new conservation corps. The word was used in the war draft bill, Connery said, and "with it in this bill, the President could draft the workers."

Objection to a provision calling for the "prevailing wage scale" to those employed in erecting barracks for the workers, also was voiced by Connery. He said the prevailing scale might be $2 per day, as the camps undoubtedly will be erected in out of the way places.

After the conference it was reported that the army corps will be in charge of providing housing facilities in the camps to be designated by the federal forestry service.

Secretary Wallace proposed an amendment to the Wagner-Robinson "Civilization Conservation Corps," allowing it to fight the gypsy moth on private property in New England and the Atlantic Coast.

PRETZEL GIRL SEEKS RECORD

Reading, Pa., March 23 (AP)—Beer's "comeback" has stimulated anew the national championship ambitions of Pennsylvania's pretzel-bending twister—twister of 30 million of the curlycues.

Ambitious to conquer new worlds 22-year-old Helen Hoffer, who won the state championship by twisting 48 pretzels a minute, now challenges all comers for American supremacy.

Every working day she turns out one and a half times her weight in pretzels, and she knocks off the return of 3.2 beer as the starting gun in a race for bigger and better pretzel-bending records.

Although a slight girl, Miss Hoffer starting work in her teens, has bent some 30,000,000 pretzels and has been able to outtwist the thousands of other workers who turn out some $4,500,000 worth of pretzels in Pennsylvania annually.

CAPITAL BEER BILL MODEL

Washington, March 23 (US)—Congress will enact a beer and wine bill for the District of Columbia in the hope the measure may serve as a model for the states that permit beverages under the national act signed yesterday by President Roosevelt.

Passage of the bill by the House today, with stipulations that Washington may have its beer and wine on April 7, when the national act becomes effective, was considered certain.

Provided in the bill is a tax of $5 per barrel of 31 gallons to be paid monthly by the brewers. Monthly reports by retailers and brewers to the district commissioners on their turnover of beer are required.

The licensing system calls for a fee of $150 a year for "on sale" permits. Eligible for these permits, provided the applicants satisfy the commissioners of their responsibility and good character, are restaurants, clubs and hotels. The beverage sold by them would be for consumption where sold.

Sealers, Marooned Two Weeks, Held by Storm on Island

St. John's, Nfld., March 23 (AP)—Twelve sealers of Coachman's Cove, marooned on Western Island nearly two weeks ago, were back on that little upthrust of land in the mouth of White Bay today.

On March 16 the 12 seal hunters set out from the mainland to kill seals on the ice pack, which carried them seaward that night. They found refuge 18 miles offshore on Western Island, and on the following day crossed the two-mile channel to Horse Island, where several settlers live.

High winds and bad ice conditions prevented an attempt to return to the mainland until yesterday, when they set out in boats to cross the 18 miles to the coast. But a northeast gale and heavy snow made retreat necessary, and their signal fires were seen again on Western Island. They were back in exactly the same position from which they escaped on March 11. A blizzard held them there.

Western Island affords plenty of shelter. It is about two and three-quarter miles long, wooded, and rises to height of 500 feet. No one lives there, however, and the men would be dependent for food on what they carried with them or what they could shoot.

The Department of Fisheries is endeavoring to arrange for the departure of a rescue ship should one be considered necessary by settlers familiar with the sealers' plight.

FILIBUSTER DELAYS PASSAGE OF WAGE SLASH MEASURE

SLIDING SCALE PLAN FACES DEFEAT

House Speaker Cites Roosevelt as Example for Legislation

By BERNARD J. DOHERTY

Continuance of filibustering tactics on the 10 and 15 per cent pay cut bill for state employes and officials is threatened today in the House when the bill comes up for final passage.

A group of about 40 Democrats, with a sprinkling of Republicans, are banded together with the purpose of ... ating not only the pay cut ... ure but a substantial number of items in the general appropriation bill, which follows the salary decreases.

SEEK TO FORCE TAX BILL

The main object sought by the group is to force the reporting of a bill to tax intangibles, which Frank A. Goodwin claims will yield about $20,000,000 from wealth now escaping taxes.

The group is elated with its success in holding the House in continuous session for more than seven and one-half hours and forcing 14 rollcalls on the bill to slice salaries and the various amendments. All of the amendments were defeated decisively and the showdown on passing the bill as reported by the ways and means committee, calling for 10 and 15 per cent slashes, to a third reading was 171 to 61.

HAYS' AMENDMENT UP AGAIN

About 20 of the 61 who voted against the bill did so from conviction and took no part in the roll call filibustering movement. One of these was Rep. John Higgins of the West End.

Conspicuous among those who did take part in the filibuster were Rep. C. F. Nelson Pratt of Saugus, Republican, and Reps. Edward J. Kelley of Worcester, Thomas Dorgan, Anthony A. McNulty, William C. Dolan, George F. Killgoar, Robert V. Lee, Hyman Manevitch, Daniel J. O'Connell, John E. Hurley of Boston, and Paul J. MacDonald of Chelsea, James E. Hagan of Somerville, and John Jones of Peabody, all Democrats.

The first fight at today's session will come with the attempt of Rep. Martin Hays of Brighton to have his amendment, calling for a sliding scale of decreases ranging from $30 for the lowest paid employes to $2700 for the highest, substituted for the 10 and 15 per cent cut bill.

This amendment was defeated at yesterday's session by a vote of 74 to 157. It is being claimed by Hays' supporters that his amendment had a good chance of being adopted until the filibuster started, that many members, disgusted with the tactics displayed, switched to the support of the 10 and 15 per cent bill.

SALTONSTALL ON FLOOR

The Hays' amendment would have saved the 14,000 state employes about $800,000, for that was the difference between the total called for in his measure and the $2,224,847 saved the state under the 10 and 15 per cent bill on a 12 months' basis.

While the Hays' amendment is expected to make a better showing in today's battle, very little chance, it is conceded, is held out for its final adoption.

Speaker Leverett Saltonstall is lined up solidly for the 10 and 15 per cent cut, and is expected to take the floor again today to hold the big non-partisan majority vote in line. The Speaker at yesterday's session outlined to the members the seriousness of the economic situation facing the state and its cities and towns.

PRAISES ROOSEVELT

"A courageous President in Washington has set an example and has inspired confidence a way that has amazed the country in the last two weeks," he declared. "The Congress has adopted his suggestions and acted with extraordinary promptness. It would be well for every state legislature and municipal government to follow such leadership."

Many cities, he said, have already cut salaries and Boston, he pointed out, is about to do so.

He reminded the legislators that several cities have already asked the legislature to refund their loans, in other words, are without sufficient revenue to pay their current bills. These cities and towns, he said, are Pittsfield, New Bedford, Revere, Lowell, Medford, Adams, and Clinton.

SAVINGS POINTED OUT

He also pointed out that the legislature has recently passed a bill which permitted some of the cities and towns whose credit is exhausted to loan upon the credit of the state, credit that has been kept strong through the efforts of the legislature.

"I am informed by the Division of Accounts," he continued, "that Fall River has applied for this aid and that applications will probably be received shortly from the cities of Revere, Chicopee, Lowell, New Bedford, Lawrence, Chelsea, Everett, Lynn, Framingham, Milford, Fairhaven and possibly others."

Under the 10 and 15 per cent wage cut bill, he said, on the eight months basis, Boston will save $284,000 through a reduced state tax; Revere, $65,000; Lowell, $19,000; Medford, $13,000; Chelsea, $8700; Everett, $11,500; Lynn, $22,700; and other municipalities in proportion to the state tax they pay.

JURIST CALLS INVESTORS 'SUCKERS'

Wisconsin Judge Says Durkee Estate a Myth, Probe Goes On

Further collection of funds to press a claim against the government in the name of the Durkee estate have been suspended here pending the outcome of the investigation by Dist. Atty. Warren A. Bishop, of Middlesex County.

Authorities assert the claim is based on the alleged filing of a bond of several million dollars with the Treasury department as guarantee of completion of a transcontinental railroad and that the bond was never returned. The Treasury department has denied that such a bond was ever deposited.

AGENTS ACTIVE

Agents of the estate are alleged to have collected nearly $500,000 in Massachusetts on the strength of this claim.

George M. Faulkner, 55, of Commonwealth ave., self-admitted Boston agent for the estate claim, appeared at Bishop's office yesterday.

Faulkner is said to have protested to the district attorney that he had acted in good faith in the matter. He denied that he had taken part in any wrong-doing and insisted that he had acted in accordance with the terms of the contract with George R. Manchester, of Washington, alleged promoter of the claim.

"SUCKERS" SAYS LETTER

Meanwhile letters, signed by judicial authorities of Wisconsin, were in the hands of Dist.-Atty. Bishop. The letters declared that persons investing money in the Durkee claim were "suckers." They were signed by Judge Robert V. Baker of the Probate Court, Kenosha, Wis., and Judge E. B. Belden of the Wisconsin Circuit Court.

HUGE STRAUS LOSSES START ACTION HERE

Millions in Defaulted Bonds Said to Be Held in N. E.

Court action is being planned here to force the closing of alleged subsidiaries of the closed S. W. Straus & Co., of New York, through which New England investors were allegedly sold more than $10,000,000 worth of defaulted bonds.

It is charged that despite the closing of the New York offices of the firm, its alleged subsidiaries are still operating here under a different name.

It was learned from John C. Hull, director of the securities division of the department of public utilities, that these alleged subsidiaries have promised to close up in a short time.

It is estimated that 2000 Massachusetts persons invested in the defaulted bonds. In Maine more than 1500 are believed to have invested while it is estimated that more than 1000 persons invested in each of the remaining New England states.

Among the investments here on securities in which New Englanders face losses, are such properties as The Barrington Court Apts., Cambridge; Maryland Apts., Boston; Sheraton Hotel, Boston; Washington Heights Apts., Brighton; Alton Court Apts., Brookline, and the Harbor Bldg., Boston.

2 BOOMED FOR STATE TROOP CAPTAINCY

Mahoney and Shimkus Urged for Berth; Parker Mentioned

Two state police lieutenants, both of whom refused to be parties to the recent burlesque court martial of Capt. Charles T. Beaupre, were under consideration today as successors to Beaupre as captain of the uniformed forces.

They are Lieut. James P. Mahoney, now in charge of Framingham barracks, and Lieut. William V. Shimkus, commander of Holden barracks. With Harry L. Avery of Northampton they were selected to try Beaupre by the now deposed commissioner, Alfred F. Foote.

REMOVAL FORCED

Talk of the appointment followed what was announced as a resignation of Capt. Beaupre but was considered a forced removal as the first of several to take place under reorganization plans of Brig.-Gen. Daniel Needham, new commissioner of public safety.

Other reports named Capt. George A. Parker, former state police captain, under consideration for a temporary return to his old post until the morale of the troops was re-established.

Gen. Needham spoke of the Capt. Parker plans in the same announcement that included his plans for selection of an executive head from his lieutenants' list. Capt. Parker is now a trustee of the Lotta Crabtree estate and one time served as registrar of motor vehicles.

FLEET FACES OUSTER

The new commissioner said he expected to reach a decision today on whether he would promote a lieutenant or depend upon outside help for his reorganization of the troops.

Next on the list of forced resignations, it was learned today, is that of Henry A. Plett, chief administrative clerk under Gen. Foote. Several other ranking officers in the police branch are to be either demoted or discharged.

Bandits Wield Axe in Auto Holdup

Worcester, March 23—Police were on a search today for two husky, axe-wielding bandits, who chopped down a tree to block the road in East Mountain st. for the holdup of two motorists. The victims, Mr. and Mrs. Emile Champigney, of Boylston st., said they were forced to stop by the felled tree and the bandits confronted them with revolvers. Champigney was relieved of $25.

GIRL IN ATTACK CASE WEEPS

J. Irving Connolly, Weston real estate man and former police officer, today will testify in his own defense in Middlesex court on charges that he criminally attacked Miss Bertha Lincoln, 22, of Fayette st., Cambridge, last December.

Bordering on hysterics Miss Lincoln yesterday told her story of the alleged attack in four hours of testimony.

"I was in the office (Connolly's real estate office) only five minutes when he knocked me to the floor, "Miss Lincoln testified.

Under cross examination she was questioned sharply on the reason she allowed Connolly to drive her home after the office visit and denied she spoke to Connolly in affectionate terms or chided him for "being a coward" when he failed to make love to her at a house party they had just left.

Asked if she wasn't afraid Connolly might attack her again on the way home, Miss Lincoln replied "No, I didn't care then."

Connolly's counsel pressed the point and Miss Lincoln became hysterical.

Mitchell Retains Max Steuer in Tax Evasion Case

New York, March 23 (AP)—Charles E. Mitchell will fight to the last ditch the government's charges that he evaded a $657,132 income tax payment in 1929. It is learned he has engaged Max D. Steuer to head a distinguished array of counsel.

Confident the government will not be able to prove he wilfully evaded the tax payment, the former chairman of the National City Bank will rely on two main points of defense, it is learned.

COUNSEL ADVISED

The first is that he was advised and guided to two eminent attorneys in making out his income tax report for 1929 and that he was assured he was within his rights in deducting the $2,800,000 loss he took in selling 18,000 shares of National City stock to his wife.

The second is his confidence that he can prove the sale was bona fide.

Federal Attorney Medalie began presentation of the case to the federal grand jury yesterday. Three witnesses were questioned and Mitchell's income tax reports and bank records were produced.

FINNISH FRIDAY

It was expected the case would be completed by tomorrow and that Medalie would ask for an indictment then to supersede the complaint on which Mitchell was arrested Tuesday night.

The speed with which Medalie acted was in keeping with instructions from Washington Attorney-General Cummings announced Tuesday night that President Roosevelt knew and approved of the prosecution.

Another development in the banking investigation came to light when it was learned that Winthrop W. Aldrich, chairman of the Chase National Bank, was closeted for four hours last Saturday with Ferdinand Pecora, counsel to the Senate banking committee.

'SNIFTER' CASE VERDICT IN

A sealed verdict in the case of Miss Ruth V. Clausen, of Chestnut Hill, charged with operating under the influence of liquor, will be opened today in Middlesex Superior Court.

The verdict was reached shortly after midnight today by the jury, which had been given the case yesterday afternoon. They were still deliberating when court was adjourned for the day and were instructed to return a sealed verdict when they came to an agreement.

Miss Clausen took the stand herself yesterday and denied telling either of two Newton police officers that she had partaken of a "smacker" or a "snifter." She admitted that she had one drink at the home of a friend but that it did not affect her. Several other witnesses testified she was sober at the time of her arrest.

Washington, March 23 (AP)—Robert Worth Bingham of Kentucky, President Roosevelt's choice for ambassador to Great Britain, was confirmed by the Senate within a few hours after his nomination was approved yesterday by the foreign relations committee.

McNary had objected to taking up the nomination in the absence of Senator Borah of Idaho, ranking Republican member on the foreign relations committee.

McNary announced he had been advised Borah had no objection to Bingham, and the Senate promptly confirmed him.

The recommendation was made yesterday by T. J. Dowdell, county master in chancery who heard testimony from Mrs. Walker and other witnesses.

Dowdell told the court Mrs. Walker had proved her charges that Walker deserted her without cause in 1928, and had since refused to live with her. The master's recommendation usually is followed by the court in divorce cases.

Divorcee, Named in Gay Parties, Denies Charge

Providence, March 23 — Mrs. Carolyn R. Wilson, 47-year-old divorcee, today took the witness stand in probate court to deny charges of her parents that she staged wild parties in her suite at the Biltmore Hotel.

The parents, Mr. and Mrs. Frank B. Grace, of Pocasset, Mass., seek a guardian for their daughter. They gave their reasons in three days of court session, which were barred to the public because Judge Yatman regarded the testimony "too snappy."

The bars were let down when the defense of Mrs. Wilson opened, thereby revealing a mysterious "Mr. Lynn" as a visitor to the hotel suite.

"Did Mrs. Goff (maid of the divorcee) ever have to feed you with a spoon after you had been drinking?" was one of the questions asked Mrs. Wilson by her counsel.

"Never," shouted the witness.

DEMETREO PICONE, celebrated chef at Hotel Bradford.
BENEDETTO CATINELLA, chef of Hotel Lenox, who was complimented by Caruso for excellence in preparing the singer's favorite dish, macaroni.

2 cups of butter (scant)
3 cups of brown sugar

1 pound of currants
1 pound of citron cut in thin slices or strips
½ cup of molasses

Keep Watch for the "Feverish Cold"

If you are "run down" or out of condition, if sluggish bowels have allowed poisonous impurities to accumulate in your system, you are very liable to suffer from "feverish" colds.

Dr. True's Elixir

Laxative Worm Expeller

will ward off or lessen these attacks by giving relief from constipation.

Mrs. E. W. Stephan of 31 Kenberma Road, Dorchester, Mass., writes: — "It was recommended to me by a relative who had used it for years, and I in turn most sincerely recommend it, most of all for children, but also as a laxative for adults."

TREAT COLDS IN THE FIRST STAGE!

—and You Nip Them in the Bud!

A cold ordinarily progresses through three stages: The Dry Stage, the first 24 hours; the Watery Secretion Stage, 1 to 3 days; the Mucous Secretion Stage. Relief in the first stage is far easier than in the later stages. In fact, it is taking chances to let a cold run beyond 24 hours.

For prompt relief of a cold take Grove's Laxative Bromo Quinine. This famous tablet stops a cold quickly because it does four things necessary. It opens the bowels. It kills the cold germs and fever in the system. It relieves the headache and grippy feeling. It tones the entire system and fortifies against further attack. That is the treatment a cold requires.

Grove's Laxative Bromo Quinine contains nothing harmful. May be safely taken by young and old and whether you stay indoors or go out. There is absolutely no penalty attached to its use. For more than 40 years it has been the standard cold and grippe tablet of the world, the formula keeping pace with Modern Medicine. Grove's Laxative Bromo Quinine now comes in two sizes—30c and 50c. For safety's sake get yourself a package today. Beware of any dealer who offers a substitute.

M-G-M PLANS GALA CAST FOR "HOLLYWOOD REVUE OF 1933" FILM

In New Hit

Lawrence Tibbett Is Added to Roster of Many Stars

By LOUELLA O. PARSONS

Universal Service Motion Picture Editor

Copyright, 1933, by Universal Service, Inc.

Los Angeles, March 23—The biggest money maker for the current year is "42nd Street," a musical comedy. Doesn't that prove the public wants gayety, song and laughter? Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, with "42nd Street" in mind, has elaborated on their original plans for producing "Hollywood Revue of 1933."

Busby Berkeley whose dance ensembles have revolutionized girl numbers for the screen, has been borrowed from Warners for the dances. Alexander Leftwich of "Hit the Deck" and "Present Arms" fame, has been signed to stage this tremendous Hollywood revue.

Louella O. Parsons

To the list of humorists, singers, dancers, etc., the name of Lawrence Tibbett has been added. Remember, this is the revue which will feature Jack Pearl, Ed Wynn, Jimmy Durante, Charles Butterworth and other stage favorites.

Joan to Stay Hiding

You can take it from several people who know Joan Crawford's state of mind, she won't leave her desert hiding place until she starts work. She will give her many weeks' vacation, for plans today pointed to "The Prizefighter and the Lady" as her next picture. Has a familiar sound, doesn't it? Well, it's the yarn written for Norma Shearer by Frances Marion and would have been a Shearer picture if Norma hadn't taken a vacation abroad.

* * *

Chatter in Hollywood:

A little bird has whispered that the Fox Co. will not renew Marian Nixon's option. The redhead has been borrowed by Universal for "Girl Without a Room."

Mrs. Joe Benjamin, ex-Mrs. Eddie Hillman went to all the trouble of bleaching her hair to be right for the screen and now if the option doesn't jell she will have to go brunette again. However, film companies do change their minds and it's possible that she may remain at this company, and continue a blonde.

* * *

Snapshots of Hollywood:

ESTELLE TAYLOR sitting tete-a-tete in the Little Club with LEONARD GOLDSTEIN, local agent. LILYAN TASHMAN nursing a broken finger. FRANCHOT TONE parading on the METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER lot with a tiny Scottie in a cigar box. PEGGY HOPKINS JOYCE doing her best to sell Paramount the film rights to her novel, "Transatlantic Wife." ROBERT YOUNG and bride off for Vancouver on a belated honeymoon. They will stop at Carmel on the way back, making the return trip by motor. MRS. ROBERT MONTGOMERY, guest of honor at a baby shower given her by MRS. REGINALD DENNY and MRS. CHESTER MORRIS. MRS. RICHARD BARTHELMESS entertaining with a small dinner party in honor of her sister who is visiting her. FRANK and RENEE BORZAGE returning home via the Panama Canal. GARY COOPER admitting his admiration for WERA ENGELS. POLAND FANKS, again in the social limelight, giving a luncheon for ELIZABETH ARDEN. MR. and MRS. JOHN DAVIS LODGE at the Assistance League. That's all today.

Sylvia Returns

Sylvia Sidney is starred with George Raft in "Pick Up," featured film at the Metropolitan tomorrow. This is the first time these two have been teamed on screen.

Class Is the Cue to the Screen When Cameras Tell Story

By HARLEIGH SCHULTZ

When in need of an advance judgment of a picture, look up the name of the director. He is the key man in filmdom—you never go far wrong in judging screen entertainment by the known art of the director. That is our experience. At the moment, the finest kind of example comes up in connection with "King Kong," which happens to have a two-fold reason for thinking it is going to prove outstanding cinema.

"King Kong," which has its premiere at Keith's tomorrow night, may with sincerity be said to be blest in its direction. It has two key men, and each is a camera genius. Together, they make up an unbeatable team for screen action. They are Ernest B. Schoedsack and Merian C. Cooper. Together, or separately, they make great pictures. Thus their names label the coming feature with quality—the film should prove a humdinger for action, drama and exciting suspenses. These two men are wizards in the Hollywood game.

By a similar token you may look forward to a grand picture in "White Sister," at the State, tomorrow. Yes, it has Helen Hayes, perhaps the greatest actress of them all. But for purposes of motion picture, which is fundamentally an eloquent lens, it is even better to know that the director is Victor Fleming, an expert; for director is ever a better criterion than actor or story.

The director translates into camera terms his story and his star and supporting cast.

Gayety Theater

The Gayety screen today will feature "Cynara," with Ronald Colman and Kay Francis, and "The Penal Code," with Regis Toomey and Helen Cohan.

Louise Closser Hale does a bit of stitching for Helen Hayes, in "White Sister," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer special on screen at Loew's State, tomorrow.

Twin Features

"The Sign of the Cross," Cecil B. DeMille's spectacular production, and "20,000 Years in Sing Sing," together with six vaudeville acts make up the new all-feature program at the Boston. "The Sign of the Cross" has Fredric March, Elissa Landi, Claudette Colbert and Charles Laughton. Warden Lawes of Sing Sing supervised the prison film, in which Spencer Tracy and Bette Davis play the leads.

Fine Arts Theater

A German professor will conduct the regular language class at the Fine Arts this evening at 9 o'clock preceding the showing of "Eine Nacht Im Paradies."

Exeter Theater

Tala Birell in "Nagana" and Leo Carrillo in "Deception" are the attractions at the Exeter for the remainder of the week.

Another alert reader, who wishes his name withheld, will receive $10 for three waterfront stories.

A $5 award goes to Lou Clayman, 1156 Commonwealth ave., Brighton, who saw a girl fall from a window in a South End boarding house for girls and who called the American with this information.

Two dollar awards go to the following: David Black, 22 Warren st., Lynn, tip on Hooper murder case; William Lasen, East Braintree, oil explosion; James R. Farrell, 51 Summer st., Maynard, powder mill explosion; Harrison Hastings, Pinedale rd., Billerica, Billerica fire.

STRIKERS GET PEACE OFFER

Haverhill, March 23—Two proposals for settlement of the Haverhill shoe strike will be offered to workers without comment today by Dennis Kelleher, district agent of the Shoe Workers' Protective Union.

The proposals, submitted at a conference held by the State Board of Arbitration last night by manufacturers' representatives, call for either a blanket 10 per cent wage increase or the acceptance of the highest wage scale now in force at any local shoe factory.

Recommendations of the board, which were not made public, were also given to representatives of the strikers and manufacturers.

Helping Hand Home to Give Program

Presenting noted performers the Ladies' Helping Hand Home for Jewish Children will give a social program Monday afternoon at the Mishkan Tefila School, 122 Elm Hill ave., Roxbury. Rabbi Herman H. Rubenovitz will address the members at the business meeting presided over by Mrs. Samuel Allman.

RECORD FOR ROLL CALLS

In calling the roll of the House 14 times in the record-breaking session on the pay reduction bill, Clerk Frank E. Bridgman and his assistant, "Larry" Grove, alternated. Grove's voice cracked only once and that was near the end of the session. Singularly enough it happened while he was calling the name of Rep. McCracken of Needham.

TARBELL LISTENS IN

George G. Tarbell, of Lincoln, representative-elect, in place of the late Rep. B. Farnham Smith, of Concord, sat on the side lines while the House debated the wage cuts for State employes. He expects to be sworn in within a few days when the formalities attending his recent election are completed.

ALL SET TO MOVE IN

Occupancy of the new building for the public works department near the North Station is expected soon. An item is in the budget for the maintenance and operation of the building, amounting to $40,000.

PETROCELLI MENTIONED

City Hall gossip has it that P. Nicholas Petrocelli, former assistant corporation counsel, will be one of former Congressman Joseph F. O'Connell's campaign managers in his coming campaign for mayor of Boston.

KELLY'S PLATFORM

Political associates say that City councillor Francis E. Kelly of Dorchester, who is scheduled to announce his candidacy for mayor within four weeks, will seek election on a platform of lower taxes and lower rents.

CLERKS IN DRIVE

Members of the Municipal Clerks' Association are conducting a drive to increase their numbers. Clerks of all city departments are eligible for membership.

CHEE' EE MAY RUN

John J. "Joe" Cheever, popular Dorchesterite, who was an unsuccessful candidate for the Democratic nomination for governor's council last fall, is expected to be a candidate for school committee this year.

SULLIVAN IS TALKED

John J. "Broadway" Sullivan of South Boston is another of those being discussed as possible candidates for school committeeman.

GRAND NATIONAL TURF CLASSIC WILL BE BROADCAST FROM ENGLAND

Historic English Steeplechase Broadcast for American Listeners Tomorrow

By N. F. T.

There is to be horse racing abroad on the air tomorrow morning. Over in old Aintree, near Liverpool, that annual Grand National turf classic is scheduled. It appears also that ample interest abounds on this side of the wide waters. Thus the National Broadcasting Company facilities, utilities and such, shall jolly well transmit the detailed description as observed through the eyes of Mr. J. C. Lyle, sport event staff man for the British Broadcasting Corporation. Ten o'clock is the time and WEEI is the Boston station to tune in.

* * *

To revert briefly, this same event last year as viewed and reviewed by the aforementioned Mr. Lyle, made exceptionally worth while listening. Rising to the crest of his enthusiasm at one point, which was just before fleet-footed "Fobra" finished first, he indulged a few phrases which would have brought him at the least a call down were they uttered through an American "mike" mechanism. Mr. Lyle said, if memory isn't amiss—"Folks, this is indeed a Hell of a Race" or something similar that definitely embraced that sixth word there between those above quotation marks. One thing certain, he knows his horses. Likewise he understands how to romance a tense scene where and when an aristocratic group of them come galloping down the bally old home stretch.

BUDY THE RINGMASTER

Another typical all-star studio show under Valee direction is being brought forth for broadcasting tonight (WEEI) from 8 to 9 o'clock. Among the prominent stage personalities taking part, loom such names as William A. Brady, Sophie (Red Hot Mamma) Tucker, and George Washington Dewey, the dark skinned concert baritone. Mr. Brady presents a scene from "The Count of Monte Cristo" and appears therein himself to enhance the dramatic impression. Adapting the famous Dumas thriller for radio production is the written scenario work of Grace George, noted actress of numerous striking footlight achievements, otherwise addressed in private life as Mrs. William A. Brady.

PROGRAM WITH A PUNCH

Boxing is afforded sport patrons tonight (WNAC) at 10, which may mean a diminishing "Baron Munchausen" audience (WEEI) at that time. Gerry Harrison holds forth to give a sock by sock story of the Babe Hunt-Joe Moody brawl tonight scrap being staged here in the Arena ring.

* * *

That annual spring theatrical institution, the "Hasty Pudding Club" production "starring" Harvard amateur actor folk, has a preview high spot (WBZ-WBZA) in the loudspeaker layout tonight, even if the allotted period is a bit late (11:30 to 11:45) by the clock. It's a fast-moving musical farce-comedy called "Step Lively" and the 87th offering of its kind.

EARNINGS OF STONE HELD AS SECRET

An attempt by Rep. Julius Sobie to force Judge Arthur P. Stone to submit to the joint legislative judiciary committee at the ousting hearing today, figures showing his earnings as an attorney for the past five years was pigeon-holed by Chairman Davis on the objection of Atty. Andrew Marshall.

Rep. Sobie said he wished to determine by such information as to the accused jurist's gross law earnings, the basis for his charge of $12,000 as a fee for his services to the Clarke sisters.

QUIZZED ON STOCK DEAL

Counsel for Judge Stone considered it highly improper to delve into the judge's private affairs. Atty. Marshall argued that it made no difference how much an attorney might make in any one year as affecting a fee, but that a fee did depend on the nature of the legal services and the amount of work done.

Chairman Davis instructed Rep. Paul McDonald, counsel for the ousting petition to kindly refer to the proceedings before the legislative committee as a "hearing" instead of a "trial."

Rep. McDonald interrogated Stone sharply and at length relative to his purchase of $5000 worth of bonds of the Rice Chocolate Company, of Everett. Judge Stone testified that he considered the bonds a good investment.

PURCHASED BY CHECK

He said he knew Rice and the company in which he was an official, and that Inez Clarke could get her money back whenever she desired. Rep. McDonald called attention to the fact that he had bought the bonds for the estate in testifying before Judge Leggat when he filed his account, which was not allowed.

He explained to the committee that the bonds were purchased by a check for $4500 drawn on the estate of Genevieve and a balance of $500 from his account as attorney. He said the bonds were bought for Inez Clarke but were for some unexplained reason made out by Mr. Rice in Judge Stone's name.

Just before adjournment Rep. McDonald started to question Judge Stone about the case of Dunn Reall, who sued the Clarke sisters for $10,000 for alleged personal injury due to falling on an icy sidewalk. Judge Stone said he considered this case "a very dangerous one" and gave much time and attention to it.

ANOTHER "KING KONG" BEAUTY PRIZE

"KING KONG" BEAUTY

The "King Kong" Mystery Beauty paying her own reward for her "capture," yesterday, to Miss Patricia Boyle, 97 Langdon st., Newton.

PATRICIA BOYLE

Photograph was taken immediately upon their arrival at the Boston American office. Get in the chase today, $25 is the award.

"King Kong" Mystery Beauty Again Invites "Capture"

Hundreds and hundreds of Boston American readers were on the trail of the "King Kong" Mystery Beauty yesterday.

Sunny skies and another daily reward of $25 brought more people to the hunt than any preceding day.

The first person to "capture" the "King Kong" Mystery Beauty was Miss Patricia Boyle, an employe in one of Boston's large banks. Miss Boyle, determined to use her lunch hour to good advantage, watched for her quarry along Tremont st. where the "King Kong" Mystery Beauty was scheduled to appear according to the tip published in the Boston American.

"I had no idea of actually capturing her," declared Miss Boyle, "when I purchased a copy of the Boston American and watched for her during the last few moments of my lunch hour."

There is another $25 on the "King Kong" Mystery Beauty's head today, tomorrow and Saturday.

HERE'S TODAY'S TIP

Watch for her near the RKO-Keith Theater, where the movie thriller "King Kong" opens Friday night at 11 o'clock with a special Hollywood premiere, and somewhere on Washington st.

TOMORROW'S TIP

The "King Kong" Mystery Beauty will pay a visit to the State House and then attempt to proceed through Boston Common to Tremont st. and thence to some of the downtown department stores.

Study her picture here today and REMEMBER HER FACE.

Read the rules and follow them carefully when capturing her.

KING KONG RULES

Read the rules and pick up the trail.

RULE NO. 1—No one connected with the Boston Evening American or the RKO-Keith Theater will be eligible to make a "capture."

RULE NO. 2—You MUST have a current copy of the Boston Evening American in your hand when you approach the girl you believe to be the "King Kong" Mystery Beauty.

RULE NO. 3—Do not grab her, but simply say: "You are the 'King Kong' Mystery Beauty, for whose capture the Boston Evening American offers a reward of $25."

Just say that and nothing more.

If you have followed these rules and on address the right girl she will acknowledge her identity and take you to the office of the Boston Evening American where you will receive the $25 at once.

In case there is no "capture" on any one day, its reward for the following day will be increased that much.

Any person who makes a "capture" is not eligible to make another "capture" during the hunt.

Smoking Increases

Washington, March 23—Lower retail prices caused Americans to smoke more cigarettes in February than a year ago, reversing the recent trend toward less smoking.

ATTACK DELAYS HIS SAILING

New York, March 23 (AP)—Jack Haskell, 42 dance director of musical shows, was beaten severely by two men who invaded his hotel room in the theatrical district last night. He suffered a concussion of the brain and lacerations of the scalp and right eye.

Haskell told detectives the men began beating him without provocation until he lost consciousness. When he regained his senses, he said, he found $6 and some jewelry missing.

Haskell came into prominence in 1930 when he and Oscar Hammerstein came to blows during rehearsals of the show "Luana."

Workers in Strike Row Dodge Town

Derry, N. H., March 23 (AP)—A large crowd of shoe workers and curious gathered along the main street last night in anticipation of a recurrence of the demonstration against alleged strike breakers returning through here from the shoe factories in Lawrence, Mass., to their homes in Manchester, but the auto cavalcade gave the town a wide berth.

A lone car, supposedly occupied by strike breakers, ran into an auto that was stopped abruptly directly in front of it, observers said, but as the crowd started toward it, the driver succeeded in getting clear and speeded away.

FILENE LAUDS JOB PLAN

Employment of the greatest possible number of people in production and distribution of things most in demand is pointed out as the basis of prosperity by Edward A. Filene, Boston merchant, in a radio address over Stations WBZ and WBZA.

He declared that unemployment must be relieved before other national problems can be dealt with successfully. He praised the employment plan of President Roosevelt and added that it would have averted many of the worst phases of depression if it had been launched three years ago.

He declared the only way that America could be operated at the greatest efficiency was to see that the masses were not only working but were producing and consuming the things which were being made.

Mrs. W. C. Donovan Rites on Saturday

Funeral services for Mrs. William C. Donovan, 70, of 40 Boutwell st., Dorchester, wife of William C. Donovan, former coach of the New England Amateur Rowing Assn., will be conducted Saturday with a solemn high mass of requiem at St. Ann's Church, Dorchester.

Mrs. Donovan was the mother of the seven Donovan brothers and, together with her husband, died in action in France. Her husband, six sons and three daughters survive.

BOSTON LINKED IN NEW SERVICE

Halifax, March 23 (AP)—Tentative plans for the inauguration of a direct service linking the port of Halifax with Boston, Charlottetown, Gaspe, St. John's and Montreal, have been made public by Thomas Cree, passenger traffic manager of the Canadian National Steamships.

The liners Prince Henry and Prince David, which have been berthed at Halifax this winter, under the proposed scheme, would be used in the new service, which has been endorsed by various business bodies here. It would start about the first of June and run through the summer and early autumn until November.

The plans have yet to be placed before the directorate for approval.

Halifax will be the home port. The proposed itinerary would call for departure from Halifax for Boston, thence to Montreal by way of Charlottetown, Gaspe, Trinity Bay, Sydney and Quebec. On the return journey the liners will call at St. John's, Nfld., with the possibility of a stop at St. Pierre, Miquelon.

Broadway Merry-Go-Round!

The lads around town are pointing their fingers and chirping, "See! Didn't I tell you?" and I find myself joining the finger-pointers and chirpers at young Doug Fairbanks, Jr., and Joan Crawford, for last May over the air and in this column I finger-pointed at the couple and voiced what was generally known—i. e., that the romance had ended. Came then by telephone, wire and letter, a series of rebukes from Mrs. Jack Whiting, mamma of young Fairbanks, ridiculing my assertions and inviting me over to the house the following Tuesday, or perhaps it was Wednesday, when Doug Junior and Joan would arrive from the Coast and I would see what I would see. I saw the pair around town and never did a couple seem more devoted—so devoted that I felt ashamed of myself for announcing that "although the Doug (Joan Crawford) Fairbanks, Jr., still share the same lares and penates, don't let them fool you. It's only a matter of time—if you get what I mean." I felt ashamed, as I say, and accordingly I wrote that "perhaps, we had all been mistaken. At any rate, until time proves we were correct, you'll hear no more from me about a rift between the Doug Fairbanks, Jrs. Evidently, it's just one of those things." But time has proved, as it has a habit of proving in these cases, that the Broadway columnists, in spite of the raps they take against us, are usually correct in their "guesses." Don't accuse us of malicious scandal-mongering—when persons of prominence are separating or marrying, it's legitimate news—the difference being that the much-maligned columnist often has the advance information. And if there is a reconciliation between Doug and Joan, you may be sure one or other of the local tribe of commentators will carry the line—in advance.

Pretty Gertrude Tonkonogy, having proved to herself that by sitting down at a typewriter and writing so many words on so many pages, you may create a successful play like "Grand Concourse Cornered Moon," rewarded young Charles K. Friedberg for his faith in her by shacking up with him in front of Mayor O'Brien yesterday and becoming Mrs. Dr. Charles K. Friedberg, thereby giving us a new romance of the theater. Six months ago, her brother, Eugene Tonkonogy, eloped with a pert gal, named Ruth Horowitz, saying nothing about it until the peculiar Tonkonogy name suddenly became very much a part of the dramatic columns. Tomorrow both Tonkonogys and their respective mates will be remarried all over again, deliberately undergoing the religious ceremonies for no better reason than that Gertrude once read about a double-wedding and thought it must be great fun. Other members of the family who may or may not attend is still another brother, who for some reason or other, dropped the tag Tonkonogy and became George Delacourte, publisher of several local magazines, including Ballyhoo.

The silly gals around town are going in for artificiality in a big way. Exaggerated eye-lashes, good for a week's wear, sometimes two, has been the accepted thing for more than a month now. Now, comes the new fad—those colored nails you clamp over your real ones, thereby saving the bother of manicuring—even of getting the soot of Manhattan out of them. As if that isn't bad enough, the beauticians are beginning to emphasize the advantage of artificial lips and artificial eye-lids—fitting concomitants for the artificial love some of the Broadway gals offer you. Which reminds me that the other night Georgie Raft asked me to feel his hair. It was as stiff as steel-wiring. It seems there's a preparation (it's not on the market) which Pancho, Ramon and other Spanish and Mexican gentlemen of town use for their hair. Besides giving it the necessary gloss, it provides a starch stiffening that makes it unnecessary to comb your hair for weeks.

Libby Holman's stage days are suddenly a thing of the past—motherhood appears to be more attractive, and on top of that she's amply supplied with funds for the remainder of her life. In spite of which, one local producer though a local agent, has been besieging the gal with offers—he has a play built about her and has had it for more than two years, holding on to it because he always felt certain that sooner or later he could entice Libby into the leading role. He hasn't given up hope yet, for only two weeks ago he paid the authors their fourth advance royalty. That's faith for you.

CUBAN REVOLT JUNTA FORMED

Miami, Fla., March 23 (AP)—Making no secret of their intention to wage revolution against President Machado in Cuba, exiled opposition leaders have organized a new junta here to direct activities of their various groups.

Time for an active revolutionary movement is indefinite, sources well informed on the Cuban situation said, but this detail will be decided after the new junta sets up headquarters in New York.

Meeting as the guests of Gen. Mario G. Menocal, former president of Cuba and for some time leader of the revolutionary party, the anti-Machado leaders mapped plans for financing their campaign.

They declined to say if they have raised sufficient funds, and likewise refused to reveal their actual plans.

They were unsuccessful in an uprising against Machado last year and many prominent Cubans fled the country or were ordered into exile. A good sized colony of these is established here.

Hundreds Flock to Brewery for Jobs

Milwaukee, March 23 (AP)—Police detail cards were called in handle crowds and rope off areas near the Pabst Brewery plant, where hundreds gathered clamoring for jobs.

Breweries took names of many applicants, but all were told that there would be no appreciable increase in jobs until beer shipments could be made.

Silk Workers' Week Limited to 30 Hours

New York, March 23 (AP)—The board of managers of the Silk Association of America at its annual meeting recommended federal legislation to forbid the employment of any person in the industry more than 30 hours a week "during the existing emergency."

Police to Guard Japs

New York, March 23—A police guard for Yosuke Matsuoka and five other Japanese delegates to the League of Nations when they arrive on the Leviathan Friday has been requested.

"SHARLIE"

The Thrilling Story of a Flapper's Daughter

By BEATRICE BURTON

Sharlie, Alarmed at Percy's Attentions, Phones for Jim Barnum to Come

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE

Pretty, vivacious Sharlie Dunn is forced by her mother to marry Eddie Wallis, a young newspaper-ad-writer, after Sharlie had spent the night in his car, which had run out of gas. Although Sharlie realizes Eddie's company, she is not in love with him. After the ceremony, Eddie takes Sharlie to live in his untidy apartment. That night Eddie is killed by an automobile. Sharlie returns to her mother's home. Mrs. Dunn, nicknamed "Dodie," and her friend, Maud Hanaberry, plan a party while their husbands are away. Sharlie is sent to her grandmother's. Finding her invitation, Sharlie goes to a dance hall. There she meets a man whom later she wants to get rid of.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

ONLY ONE THING was clear to Sharlie at that moment . . . She must get rid of this man just as soon as she could.

But how was she to do it?

"If I get on a street car he'll follow me, sure as Fate," she thought, "and he'll get off when I do."

A moment before the thought of walking down Milton st. with him had not frightened her. But now she suddenly remembered the dark vacant lot between the corner and her grandmother's house. A high sign-board, and it fronted the street and there was a voting-booth made of corrugated iron in the middle of it . . . No, she was not going to walk down Milton st. with this strange man at ten or eleven o'clock on a dark night like this one. No, indeed!

She was not going to get into his car and let him carry her home, either . . . and there was no money in her purse for a taxicab.

Suddenly, as she stood beside him, a bright thought struck her.

There was just a chance that the Barnums had returned from their drive to Shelbyville. She would telephone their flat and ask Jim to come to Joyland and get her in his new car!

"Let's go back and have one more dance. They're playing 'The Song of India'!" she said to the man beside her. "It's only ten o'clock."

Went Up Stairs

They went up the stairs together. At the top Sharlie left him.

"I'm going into the dressing room for a minute," she said. "I'll be right back. Wait for me."

There was a telephone in the dressing room. On the wall near it, girls had written names and numbers and addresses with their lipsticks or eyebrow pencils.

She gave the Barnums' number and in a few seconds Jim's voice came over the wire to her:

"Hello."

"Hello, Jim!" said Sharlie. "Oh, I'm so glad you're at home, Jim! I'm at a place called Joyland. Do you know where it is?"

"Yes."

"Well, will you come here and get me, Jim?"

"You know I will. But what are you doing there, Are you alone?"

"Yes. And please hurry, Jim . . . How long will it take you to be here?"

"Ten minutes," said Jim and hung up.

Sharlie turned away from the telephone and made up her face before the mirror on the opposite wall. Then she sat down on the only chair in the hot bright little room and smoked a cigarette.

By that time eight of the ten minutes were gone. She opened the door of the dressing room and stepped out into the crowd at the top of the steps.

The man was waiting for her. She went up to him with a smile.

"I hated to take you away from here," she said to him. "It was lovely of you to offer to take me home, but I couldn't think of letting you do it. So I just telephoned a friend of mine and he's coming for me."

He Was Waiting

She started for the stairs. "Good night," she said, looking back over her shoulder.

The man took a step or two after her. "Wait a minute!"

He pulled a card from one of his pockets and scribbled something on it. Then he held it out to her.

"Call me up some time when you feel like dancing again," he said. "I'm mighty sorry you wouldn't let me drive you home tonight. "I would have enjoyed doing it."

He looked so pleasant and cheerful standing there, smiling at her, that she told herself she had been a fool to get panicky and telephone for Jim Barnum.

"I'll be here next Wednesday night," she said, "at half past eight."

"I'll meet you." He took her arm and they went down the stairs side by side.

Jim was just getting out of his car when they reached the street. He stood beside it, looking at them in a puzzled way while Sharlie said good night to her stranger.

"Who was that guy?" he asked when she came across the sidewalk and got into the car. "I thought you said you were here alone."

Sharlie nodded. "And so I was," she answered airily. "That man tried to hang himself on me. I had the worst time getting rid of him—long enough to telephone you! He had a car and he insisted that I ride home with him. I was just frightened to death."

"You didn't look frightened," Jim said grimly as he started the car. "You were shaking hands with him as if he were your long-lost lover!"

He turned his head and gave her a quick look that had both perplexity and disgust in it.

"Sharlie, what kind of a girl are you, anyway?" he asked bluntly. "Going to a place like Joyland alone, and letting a man pick you up! That's a cheap stuff, Sharlie. If Gertrude did a thing like that I'd disown her!"

Scorn in Voice

"Gertrude!" echoed Sharlie, and there was scorn in her voice.

What did Gertrude, with her square figure, her quiet ways and her dull love affair with Guy King, know about Sharlie's desperate need for thrills and excitement? For lights, a dance floor and a dancing partner? For the things she thought of as "the joy of living?"

"Jim, don't be angry with me," she said and laid her hand on his arm a second. "I've been through such horrors lately . . . You know I have. It just seemed to me that I had to get out and do something gay and lively or I'd pass out."

He shrugged his shoulders.

"We asked you to drive over to Shelbyville for a chicken dinner tonight," he said, "and while it wasn't anything particularly gay, it was better than a night at a dump like Joyland, I should think."

"Yes, and you know why I didn't go with you," Sharlie came back at him. "Because Dodie wouldn't let me go! . . . Jim, you're turning the wrong way. I'm going to my grandmother's to spend the night. Don't you remember I told you so?"

When they reached Milton st. it was still silent and Grandmother Dunn's little house was in darkness.

"They've all gone to bed," Sharlie said. "Jim, you don't know how I hate to ring the bell and wake them up! . . . Grandmother will have to know that you brought me here, and she'll be sure to telephone my mother in the morning . . . and, Jim, I'm so sick and tired of being razzed by the whole family!"

Jim thought for a minute.

"Why don't you stay with us all night? You can sleep with Gertrude and let your mother know where you are first thing in the morning," he suggested. "Your grandmother isn't expecting you, is she?"

"No, I should have let her know that I was coming home. But I didn't. I thought surely she'd be here," Sharlie answered. "Jim, my key's on the back porch. I left it here tonight. You go and get it."

Jim got out, walking through the darkness like a tiger or footpad. Then they drove back to Halstead st. Jim cautiously opened the door they got there. Sharlie looked at him once or twice. His face was set and hard, as if he was thinking hard unpleasant thoughts.

"I'm going to leave the car in the lot behind Gertrude's tonight," he said. "You want to drive around there with me, and go up the back way? Gertrude and Guy were listening to the radio when I left. They'll let us in."

Sharlie saw that there was a light in her mother's kitchen when she reached the second-floor porch.

"I'm going to peek in at the window," she whispered to Jim, "and see who's there. She and Maud were having a little card party."

Sharlie feels peeved at Dodie for ousting her when she gave the party. Events of lively interest follow in this fast-moving tale of the flapper's daughter.

Roosevelt Jobs Plan Offers Way to Get U. S. Off the Dole

By ROBERT E. ROGERS

SO FAR AS I KNOW President Roosevelt's proposal for a "Civilian Conservation Corps" is unique in American history. The specialists may be able to dig up an occasional local instance back in the past when such a thing was proposed, but if such proposals ever got to the practical stage there are large gaps in my knowledge of American history.

R. E. ROGERS

As you know, the President proposes to begin with forest conservation; to employ 250,000 men at woods work, under enlistments for one year, at a pay of $1 a day and complete subsistence as in the Army. The President hopes, apparently, once this measure is adopted, to expand the proposal to cover many fields of important public works. It is too early to predict the fate of the bill, but one may guess that if the Administration can drive through the Farm Relief bill it ought to be able to have its way in this matter.

Labor Fails to Solve Problem

There can be no doubt that the proposal falls strangely upon the ears of those of us in whom traditional American individualism is so deeply ingrained that any departure from it seems like heresy. But I am perfectly sure that recent events have educated a large proportion of our people to the realization that the classic conditions of American individualism are played out, perhaps for a long time to come.

If we welcome government intervention and control in some things which are agreeable to us, as in the federal control of the banks, we may have to fall back upon government intervention and control in other things where it is not so pleasant. Mr. Hoover's "rugged individualism" was voted down as a failure by heavy majorities. No cries of "Fascism" from the extreme left, no last ditch obstruction from the proponents of conservative labor, need affect the administration very seriously.

The President of the A. F. of L. has consistently opposed every proposal that has been made to put men to work unless it safeguards the short working week and the 1929 scale of wages. It is becoming increasingly evident that the two are incompatible. He has objected to such proposals as the "share-the-work" plan, by which labor would do its share in taking care of its own. And as nearly as I can remember, he has not offered any practical suggestions by which men can actually be put back to work.

It is becoming increasingly evident that a determined clinging to the old status quo of organized labor philosophy is not going to solve the problem of putting men to work. If the emergency grows more acute, the emergency methods must obviously become more direct and drastic, with less and less consideration of what, after all, are academic considerations.

Move Is No Design on Wage Scale

The first objection is to the army pay of $1 a day. It is suggested that wages should be fixed at "standard wage rates." It is far from clear what is meant by standard wage rates. If it means the wages fixed by the big unions, as of 1929, that is obviously impossible. But if you take a general average of wages as they actually exist in this country today and compare that figure with complete subsistence plus $30 cash, I venture to say that the comparison will not prove so unfavorable to the proposed national emergency wage. The cry of the Radicals that such a proposal is merely the opening step in a campaign to deflate all American wages permanently, is merely political talk. America is convinced of the correctness of the philosophy of wages just as high as the traffic will bear. But America, the great sensible majority of America, also knows perfectly well that an emergency must substitute what is possible for what is desirable.

If the friends and counsellors of Labor recommend rejecting Mr. Roosevelt's proposal, they are saying in effect that the Doie is preferable to an emergency wage. Better loaf in comfort at the expense of the taxpayer than work at a subsistence wage in order to help the taxpayer bear the burden of the depression. That point of view is quite as un-American as either Fascism or Communism.

The other point of attack is that of the yearly enlistment and the semi-military organization. There is no doubt that sticks in the crop. One might suppose that it would be possible to fill the quotas without that provision. But the American is traditionally an independent and comparatively unlucky worker. He has been accustomed so long to exceptional wage and working conditions that he is not accustomed to working where conditions are not of his choice.

The remarkably heavy labor turnover in America is probably one of the reasons why the administration wants to be sure that if it initiates important and costly labor projects it will not be handicapped by a steady stream of men joining up and leaving without notice. In many cases the requirement of a year's enlistment will be the best thing, morally, that could possibly happen to many men who have got out of the habit of work. This is particularly true of the younger men who have never had the opportunity to settle down into that habit.

No Military Training in Plan

The civilian distrusts, and with considerable reason, the military type of mind. If the actual useful work in the project were to be made only a side issue to the type of militarism which so many officers think indispensable to organization, it would be most unfortunate and it would not be endured. But a reasonable amount of routine mass organization is only to be expected, and does not deserve criticism. Then, too, President Roosevelt's plan stipulates it is not military training.

Even so outspoken and consistent an opponent of militarism as William James, the most American of philosophers, admitted that there were certain things about military organization which were admirable. In his "The Moral Equivalent of War," he wrote, quoting with approval Mr. H. G. Wells in "First and Last Things":

"'In many ways military organization is the most peaceful of activities. When the contemporary man steps from the street of clamorous insincere advertisement, push, adulteration, underselling and intermittent employment, into the barrack yard, he steps on to a higher social plane, into an atmosphere of service and co-operation and of infinitely more honorable emulations. Here at least men are not flung out of employment to degenerate. They are fed and drilled and trained for better services. Here at least a man is supposed to win promotion by self forgetfulness and not by self seeking.'

"Wells adds that he thinks that the conceptions of order and discipline, the tradition of service and devotion, of physical fitness, unstinted exertion and universal responsibility . . . will remain a permanent acquisition when the last ammunition has been used in the fireworks that celebrate a final peace. I believe as he does."

That, of course, was written a good many years ago and it is not impossible that both Wells' and James' views would be different nowadays. But I give it to you for what it is worth.

My Boy Franklin

As Told by His Mother to Isabelle Leighton and Gabrielle Forbush

Roosevelt Passes at Groton; Plan to Enlist for Spanish War Halted by Measles

Mrs. Roosevelt has told in foregoing chapters of her attempts to lay down rules of conduct for her boy Franklin and how he often broke away from them. His "blood-curdling tastes" in games and literature was a marked contrast to the little man she futilely tried to make him, she said. She tried to induce him to wear Scotch kilts, but finally had to compromise on a sailor suit. Then he begged to have his blond curls cut off like other boys and eventually won his way. His parents were never strict for the sake of being strict, and, in fact, Franklin never needed that kind of handling. When they set off to put him in Groton school, his pride kept him from showing his heavy heart.

CHAPTER 5

OFTEN during the days that followed our trip to Groton where we had left Franklin dry-eyed and resolute, if a little tremulous, I thought of him sitting quite alone for the first time in the tiny cubicle which for the next four years he was to call home. However, my concern over his reaction to the severity of his new surroundings was entirely wasted, for he reveled in the simplicity of his dormitory room. His bed, chair, and bureau were his castle, and no feudal lord was ever prouder to have anything for his own.

His road, I realized, would be none too easy to travel, for most of the boys in the form he entered had already been at school for two years. During that time it was only natural that they should have chosen their friends, found their special interests, and might easily regard a new boy as a good deal of an interloper. Franklin, I understand, was never aware that he had any obstacles to overcome in that direction.

He had, even then, a spontaneous smile that was completely disarming, all the more so because it broke unexpectedly free of the shyness against which he had waged an unsuccessful fight since early childhood. It was no time at all, I am told, after he was thrown with boys of his own age that his timidity went out like ice in a spring flood. Almost overnight he became gentle and gregarious and entered with the frankest enjoyment into every kind of school activity.

Whether he excelled at what he tackled or whether he met with indifferent success had little or no influence upon his enthusiasm for the project. He had a hearty interest in all sorts of games, but did not play any of them conspicuously well. He went out for football, baseball and track, but did not, I believe, make the first teams. I know that he became manager of the baseball team, which seemed a very high-sounding position to my uninformed view, but, from what my grandchildren tell me, it is an ignominious chore which devolves principally on taking charge of the uniforms, getting out early on the ball field to mark off the necessary white lines with the paint machine, and exhorting the players to do their best—knowing full well that they play no value on the manager's opinion.

Good at Studies

He did very well at his studies, but was far from being a prodigy. He had his little triumphs when as a member of the Debating Team his side won; but he had his failures, too. And what ambitious subjects those youngsters undertook to settle! One time the discussion hinged on whether capital punishment should be abolished. At another they argued the advisability of increasing the United States Navy. On a third occasion they fought bitterly over whether the United States and England could be expected to guarantee the integrity of China, and during Franklin's last term he defended the theory that the Filipinos be given their independence as soon as they demonstrated their ability to handle it—only to emerge a loser.

But with the resiliency that characterizes extreme youth these immature minds could shed the mantle of statesmanship in which they enveloped themselves on occasions such as these and return to the less-taxing demands of childhood. Every so often, when the spirit moved, permission first having been obtained from the headmaster, groups of two or three of them would walk to the village and lay in a 20-cent supply of fig newtons. This expenditure represented a week's allowance minus the five cents that was kept in reserve for the collection plate on Sunday. These goodies were then transported with great secrecy deep into the woods where they were hidden in the little twig huts with which the boys had dotted the forest. If luck attended, the sweets were still there when they returned during the Saturday play hour to munch them undisturbed, but more often marauding parties sent out by rival teams found the treasure and made short work of the cached cookies.

Has Scarlet Fever

These too frequent sallies into the confectioner's shop kept the school infirmary busy nursing spoiled tummies, although when Franklin made his clinical debut it was for no trivial disorder, but with what was then, as it is now, a dread disease—scarlet fever. He contracted it while my husband and I were abroad staying at Bad Nauheim. Daily cabled reports that came to us advised us it would be entirely unnecessary for Mr. Roosevelt to interrupt the cure he was taking and urged us, since Franklin was already in the recuperative stage, not to. Our plans we were anxious to abandon. They reckoned, it seemed, without Franklin's capacity for establishing his own precedents, for, through pure mischievousness and an irrepressible love of excitement, he turned what had all the earmarks of a mild attack into a serious infection.

He was quarantined with two other boys who were recovering from the same ailment that had attacked my son. All three were making a satisfactory progress until one of them—I'm afraid it was Franklin—put a highly nefarious plan into action. Their nurse, a waddly, good-natured soul, used to make frequent trips into the ward to note the condition of her patients, and so sooner was her back turned, than they would hitch on to her starched skirts, and, with her first move in the opposite direction, set their beds whizzing on casters, skating across the highly-waxed floor.

Has a Relapse

This performance repeated at frequent intervals so aggravated Franklin's condition that he was soon in the throes of a relapse. Of course, he caught the first boat home as soon as we heard that his temperature was mounting, but when I arrived on the scene I was told that unless I, too, meant to remain in isolation I could not see him.

In spite of my husband's anxiety,

MUMPS and MEASLES KEPT FRANKLIN from the SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR. HE and a CHUM HAD PLANNED to RUN AWAY from GROTON and ENLIST.

WON NO SPECIAL SPORTS HONORS

"He did very well at his studies, but was far from being a prodigy. He had hearty interest in all sorts of games—, but did not play any of them well. He went out for football, baseball and track, but did not, I believe, make the first teams. He became manager of the baseball team."

MEASLES-MUMPS KEPT HIM OUT OF WAR

"Though Franklin rated highest in his Harvard application examinations, he was infinitely more excited over breaking the school record for the running high kick." The boy Roosevelt, while at Groton, suffered all the diseases of children, such as measles, mumps and whooping cough.

$8000 ROXBURY FIRE PROBED

Investigation was being made today to determine the origin of the two-alarm fire which swept through an abandoned wooden building in Atkinson st., Roxbury, early last night, causing $8000 damage and threatening nearby lumber yards.

The burned building, owned by the New Haven Railroad, has been unoccupied for the past five years. A three-story brick building, located 50 feet from the burning building, was also threatened. Sparks started several small fires on the roof of this building, but they were quickly extinguished.

Several nearby lumber yards were also threatened by sparks. Firemen ran baselines into the yards as a precaution.

Air Search on for Missing Ship

The coast guard seaplane Adhara No. 29, will take off from Gloucester today to aid in the search for the New Bedford fishing schooner Mary, unreported since March 8. Coast Guard patrol boats have been scouring Georges Banks in the hunt for the overdue vessel, and the plane will supplement their efforts today.

Artist Loses Suit Over Deb's Party

Mrs. Louise D. Beale, Beacon Hill decorative artist, today was declared loser in her suit for $137.50 to cover work on decorations for the recent coming out party of Miss Jane Woodhouse at Hotel Statler. Mrs. Beale had sued Mrs. Alice C. Woodhouse of Commonwealth ave., mother of the debutante, before Judge Elijah Adlow.

POLICE CLEARED BY HULTMAN

Three South Boston policemen, who testified as defense witnesses in an auto case, need not face a trial board, according to a decision of Police Commissioner Hultman.

The three officers, Patrolmen William H. Stanley and Charles H. Clapp of City Point and John Riva of the Athens st. station, were ordered under investigation of their superiors when it was learned they testified for Harry Marcus of Broadway, South Boston, charged with operating so as to endanger.

Hultman said he dropped the police investigation after he talked with Judge Greenhalge, before whom the Marcus case was tried.

GUY NAMES TWO CONSERVATORS

Guy L. Weymouth, president of the Belmont Trust Co., was appointed conservator of that bank by Bank Commissioner Arthur Guy, the first such appointment since legislative and federal authority was given Guy for such appointments.

Arthur Sweetser, president of the Merchants Trust Co., of Lawrence, was appointed conservator for that bank. Both will work with advisory boards in straightening out matters that must be cleared up at each bank.

Jailed 15 Days for Dodging Carfare

For using a slug instead of a dime for carfare, John A. MacDonald, 37, of Frank st., Cambridge, started a 15-day sentence in the House of Correction today.

Solomon Witnesses Bask in Luxury; Curran Is Jailed

While five Negroes ate heartily, whether or not it's at the expense of the city or of Police Commissioner Hultman, Thomas Curran, of South Boston, a sixth "protected" witness, was jailed at Plymouth today as a material witness.

Curran is held as a witness to the attack in January upon Special Officer Daniel J. McDonald in a South Boston hangout of the Gustin Gang.

The five Negroes are witnesses of the Cotton Club slaying of Charlie "King" Solomon. Their "Life of Reilly" was first revealed in the Boston Evening American in January.

City Auditor Rupert S. Carven, who approved one bill of more than $1700, yesterday rejected a second bill totalling $1200 after Mayor Curley, Corporation Counsel Samuel Silverman and members of the City Council decided the expense was not a proper charge against the city.

Commissioner Hultman will make no move until he gets a copy of Counsel Silverman's decision.

Curran, it was learned today, has been under protection at the home of Sergt. James V. Crowley since his testimony sent Thomas P. Dineen and Anthony Dembrowski to State prison for the attack on McDonald.

His life is in danger, police said, until Stephen Walker, leader of the Gustin Gang, and his chauffeur, Frank Sullivan, are taken into custody.

Auto Bandits Get $50 in Robbery

Two men, who escaped in an auto after robbing Herold Hickman, manager of a grocery store in Franklin st., Allston, of $50 last night, were being sought by police today. Hickman told police the pair, both armed, entered the store at 6.30 p. m. and forced him to hand over the money.

RIVER DRAINED IN GIRL HUNT

The final effort to locate the bodies of June Beldine and Helen Lindeman, missing Roxbury girls, the damming and draining of Muddy river, may be started today. The girls have been missing since Feb. 21.

Plans call for the damming of the river at the 109 st. bridge to form a lagoon in the rear of the Art Museum and the lowering of the water level between the dam and Charles river.

The dam will be constructed of sandbags. Members of the fire department will be asked to perform the task of pumping the water out of the river.

CLOTHES SCHOOL

By MARGARET MATSON

TO CONTINUE OUR WARDROBE PLANNING discussion that we started last time. . . . We said on Tuesday that the way to plan a wardrobe was first of all to go over very carefully the clothes on hand, decide which were to be worn as they were, which renovated and how, and what accessories one had or needed to complete them as outfits. The next step was to prepare a "Necessary to buy" list which would tell what additional clothes were required to make a well-balanced wardrobe. We said nothing concerning what constituted a well-balanced wardrobe, and it is that angle which we should like to attack today.

Almost every individual has different requirements. There are business girls, for instance, who seldom if ever wear evening clothes. There are any number of women—unfortunately—who have no need for active sports clothes. There are a vast number who need own no formal afternoon clothes. And so it goes. To say generally that this and that should be in a perfect wardrobe is hopeless. Therefore it behooves each individual to analyze her own situation and to decide for herself what distribution she should make of her clothing allowance. Almost everyone should be prepared with at least one costume for each occasion, however. Even though one goes to only one formal party or one wedding reception, it is rather tragic not to be able to dress suitably—and it is very unwise to wait until the day of the engagement to buy an outfit. It's "buy in haste, repent at leisure" in most cases.

If one's budget is a bit limited—as whose isn't these days!—it is well to plan so that the necessary variety comes from an interchange of the garments and accessories that one has chosen. That is for instance, if one has selected a suit with a long or longish coat, the coat should be of a color that will combine nicely with other dresses. Hats, gloves, bags and shoes should look as though bought with only one outfit in mind, and yet be complementary to several outfits. And so on. Unusual accessories are, of course, a great help in getting variety out of a small expenditure.

In order to carry out the plan of interchanging parts of the wardrobe, it is necessary to decide upon a seasonal color scheme. Many years ago, no one cared if the hat was one color, the coat a second, shoes a third, and so on. But today, the ensemble is the first consideration. One can build around navy as a background, for example, and see to it that everything which might be assembled is of harmonizing colors. All one's street clothes, all the afternoon clothes, and all the evening clothes should have their own definite color schemes—not all the same, however, for one could never interchange daytime with evening. (We might except some little evening jackets that go equally well with sports clothes.)

This is the BOSTON EVENING AMERICAN SCHOOL OF CLOTHES. If you have questions to ask concerning your own wardrobe, please feel free to ask them. We shall devote Saturday's talk entirely to letters.

GOING BACK TO THE CROCHET HOOK!

The little boutoniere could be made of white or ecru for the petals and bud and with leaves and stamens of any color you wish. Once you learn the trick, you will wish to do a number of various color combinations to wear on your suits and simple dresses.

Crocheted gloves are slightly more difficult and extremely smart. Gloves have thrown off all their old inhibitions and are adopting any number of new fabrics, of which crochet could be named as one.

Fashion has rediscovered the crochet hook and the knitting needle. And just when we had begun to think that their use was becoming a lost art. Of course, you do not have to do your knitting and crocheting yourself — the shops are filled with crocheted berets, scarfs, boutonieres and gloves, and with knitted things of all descriptions—but if you are clever and your fingers are nimble, there is fun to be had and economy to be practiced in the concoction of sprightly crocheted or knitted accessories which you can make.

Exercise Keeps You Young

Age Has Little to Do With Years

By DOROTHY MacLENNON

I AM GOING to tell you a secret. Age has very little to do with years. If your body is free and elastic—that is—easily moved—not set—not fixed in a definite position—you are young—no matter how old you are in years.

But if your body is fixed or set—so it is hard for you to move easily—you are in danger of being called old—no matter how young in years you may be.

Someone has said that we are as young as our arteries. Another has said that we are as old as our spines. Both of these statements are true—but why let our arteries and spinal columns become old and hard and rigid?

If we keep in training we cannot cheat the chronological years because they come and go with great regularity — as we know. We can, however, greatly retard the physiological ageing process by keeping in good health and in good spirits.

Naturally, then, we are better looking and younger than those whose bodies age so rapidly through inactivity.

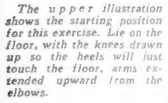
So we take our daily exercises to coax our muscles into youthful trim and good health.

Ask your physician whether you may take the exercises shown below. If you are well—I am sure he will say yes.

Exercise Back and Shoulders

The upper illustration shows the starting position for this exercise. Lie on the floor, with the knees drawn up so the heels will just touch the floor, arms extended upward from the elbows.

Then thrust one arm and then the other upward with all the force you can muster.



In the reverse motion draw the arms backward with the same force so that the shoulder blades are replaced squarely on the floor. Use shoulder force, not elbow force.

Tell Girl Your Right Name

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

Sometime ago I met a girl at a dance, and in introducing myself I gave her a name I have been going under for the past four or five years. This name is only a part of my real one. When she introduces me to friends by that name I never feel quite right. I have a guilty feeling. Most of my friends know me only by my fractional name, and my mail comes to me that way. Do you think I should tell the girl my right name, or leave things as they are? Do you think she will understand? I believe she will but I don't know how to start in telling her. You see, I don't want to lose her. UNDECIDED

Dear Undecided: Her sympathetic understanding of the case will depend on your reasons for changing your name. People do that sometimes because they dislike the ancestral name or do not wish to be identified with the race it suggests. But if you dropped part of your name because you have been in trouble and don't wish to be identified, that will be more difficult. Better be absolutely sure of your girl before you offer her such a plea, and don't think of marrying without telling her the truth.

Can't Confide in Mother

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am seventeen, and until lately was allowed to have boys and girls to come to our house once or twice a week. Everything went fine until my brother told mother he saw one of the boys kissing me, and, now no one is allowed to come to the house any more. This is absolutely untrue, Miss Fairfax, because I have never been kissed in my life and how can I keep my friends if I can never have company even once or twice a week?

My mother gives as another excuse that my father has to be up very early in the morning and that I keep him awake by having the radio going and girls and boys laughing and talking. When I have friends, Dad goes to bed at eight. When there's no one there, he will sit up until long half-past ten. J. M. B.

Dear J. M. B.: Why don't you have it out with the brother who told tales on you, which you assure me were not true, and tell him this is very lacking in sportsmanship. Certainly, he should be manly enough to tell your mother the truth about this.

Watch for Signs of Measles

By DR. R. S. COPELAND

NOT LONG ago I told you about German measles and the more common form of measles. Since then, many inquiries have come to me from mothers. It seems desirable to go somewhat into detail regarding this ton frequent affliction of childhood.

Dr. Copeland

In some of these letters, the question was asked: "How long is it necessary for the afflicted child to remain at home?" Other mothers desired more information regarding the diagnosis, the recognition of measles.

It is probable that measles is the most contagious of all the diseases of childhood. It is quickly transmitted from one person to another. It is a difficult disease to control because the sufferer may transmit the disease to others, even before the signs of measles appear.

For example, a child may cough and sneeze for two or three days and attend school during this time. Because he has no fever, the mother permits him to go to school. Even though the eyes begin to water, the mother still believes her child is suffering from nothing worse than a cold.

But pretty soon the child complains of sore and painful eyes and running nose. A rash appears around the ears and face. Measles is then suspected. Unfortunately, the harm of exposure to other children has been done and the disease has been spread.

Never consider measles too lightly. The sufferer should rest in bed, be given a light diet, and isolated from other children. The eyes should be protected from sunlight and glaring lights. Boric acid solution should be used to cleanse the eyes and nose. The disease is contagious until after the rash has disappeared.

Measles differs from German measles in that it is more severe. German measles is a mild ailment and the sufferer is only slightly ill.

German measles, measles, chicken pox, scarlet fever and diphtheria still continue to be serious hazards to the health of our children.

Saving Sugar in Rhubarb Pie Cooking

By MARTHA LEE

HAD ANY SPRING RHUBARB YET? It's a delicious way to take a spring tonic—and a rhubarb pie for Sunday dinner would grease the domestic wheels I know. The only "out" about rhubarb is the way sugar just melts away in it, unless you know this trick that will not only save pennies—it will create a sweet, fresh-flavored sauce that you'll all enjoy. This is a filling for a rhubarb short cake, preferably made with a biscuit crust.

Take 4 cups rhubarb, cut in small pieces, ½ teaspoon cinnamon, ½ level teaspoon all phosphate baking powder, and 1 cup sugar. Note that it calls for only one cup of sugar instead of the usual two.

Peel the rhubarb, cut it into small pieces about an inch long. Cover with boiling water and allow to stand for a few moments. Then pour off the water and sprinkle with sugar and cinnamon. Add the baking powder. Cover again with water, using just enough to keep the rhubarb from burning as it cooks. Cook until tender. Since rhubarb itself contains such a large amount of water, very little water is needed in cooking. When you are ready to serve this spicy dessert, spread this filling between piping hot layers of biscuit crust.

You can have some of the filling left over to pour over the individual servings if desired.

The baking powder in the filling is the unusual ingredient. It's quite a new idea, but an excellent one. That half teaspoon of baking powder allows you to cut down the sugar quantity one half. Just try it—you'll be delighted with the result. Many other fruit sauces can be handled in similar fashion.

P. S. Enrollments are coming in fast for the spring classes in the Martha Lee Cooking School, to open April 4th and 5th. There is no charge for these classes, but it is necessary to secure a ticket of admission. The Tuesday evening classes are held at 6:30 here at 6 Winthrop sq., and the same lesson is repeated Wednesday afternoons at 2. Better get your enrollment in today, and avoid disappointment.

Give Escort His Chance to Be Polite

By MRS. BEECKMAN

DEAR MRS. BEECKMAN:

Please tell me just what is correct to do when my escort calls for me, particularly if it is raining . . . is it necessary for him to get out of the car to come to my door? Wouldn't it be more considerate of me to tell him to blow the horn once or twice and wait in the car for me?

FRANCES.

A man, a manly man, a man who would rather be polite, will never thank you for this kind of planning for him as if he were not made of "stern stuff." A manly man wants to be a gentleman, and he wants a lady to take for granted that he wants to be a gentleman. Letting him down in this way isn't pleasant to him, and if he is worth his salt, he wouldn't dream of taking weak advantage of your impolite suggestion. If a little effort will hurt him, or if a little rain will hurt him . . . it's just too bad.

Hospitality

DEAR MRS. BEECKMAN:

We have only one bed, a double bed, in our home. In the spare room is a couch and a desk Often my friends stay over night, either through my invitation or their own suggestion. Always I am embarrassed as to which to offer them. Should they sleep with me in the big bed, or alone in the other room on the couch? It is a double couch, but so placed that it cannot be pulled out without a great deal of trouble, which makes the guest feel we are going to too much confusion. M.

Under all the conditions, I should take it for granted that the guest should be given the most comfortable accommodation, which is the bed in your room. Have the linen in your linen closet always so arranged that you can quickly make provision for these sleeping arrangements.

Black Tie Proper

DEAR MRS. BEECKMAN:

1—What color tie does the groom wear at a church wedding? He is wearing a Tuxedo.

2—When going to a hotel, does the groom follow the bellboy and does the bride follow them?

1—There is only one tie appropriate to wear with a tuxedo . . . a black bow tie. The white bow tie is appropriate only with formal evening clothes, the "tail-coat."

2—They follow the bellboy together. Then when they reach the elevator, the man stands aside to let the woman enter first. And, as they reach their floor, again he stands aside, to allow her to go first from the elevator.

Listen, World!

By ELSIE ROBINSON

Your Life IF—

AFTER YOU'RE 45 you begin thinking about how different life would have been IF—

If you'd married the other man, or the other woman.

Or not married at all.

If you had stayed in the little town where you were born; gone on living in the dear, familiar streets; bringing up your family with the dear, familiar friends —would that have been better?

Elsie Robinson

Or if you HADN'T stayed in that little town—

If, instead, you'd gone out into the Big World—

Broken all the old ties; adjusted yourself to entirely new places, new faces—what then?

If you'd gone on with the job where you started—turned your back on ambition; controlled your restlessness; been content with slow but safe advancement—

Or, perhaps, done just the other thing—forced yourself out of the rut; shamed your own timidity; disregarded neighborly warnings; taken a chance—

Which would have been wiser?

Those gobs and gobs of mistakes you made—

The times you've lied; gotten yourself talked about; acted smarty—

The walls of resentment you've let rise between yourself and people you once loved—

Would life have been better, happier, if you hadn't done those things?

Or are you stronger and wiser because you did make a fool of yourself, and paid the painful penalty?

After you're forty-five, you begin to ask questions like that—begin an endless see-sawing of wonder and regret. Thinking it all over—and you do very little else—sometimes you're sad; sometimes you're glad, sometimes you're mad.

But always you're puzzled.

HOW DIFFERENT WOULD LIFE HAVE BEEN, IF—

Probably very little different in the long run, partner. For our fate isn't determined by the places we go, or the people we know, or the things we do. It is determined by our personal reaction to these things. And your reaction, in all probability, would have been pretty much the same wherever you'd gone, whatever you'd done.

Life might have been much more exciting, or much less exacting. If you'd lived somewhere else. People might have been more friendly, or unfriendly. Your health might have been improved, or handicapped. But, deep inside you, you'd have felt about the same; developed the same amount of courage, or kindness, or honesty, or density, or pride—or the reverse cussedness. And that's what counts!

WHAT YOU FEEL ABOUT THINGS — HOW YOU, YOURSELF, MEET THINGS — THAT IS WHAT COUNTS. THAT IS ALL THAT REALLY COUNTS.

FOR THOSE INNER FEELINGS AND SECRET REACTIONS MAKE YOUR REAL LIFE. YOUR REAL WORLD.

You don't live in little peaceful ole Greenfield, or big, busy, blatant N'yawk. You live in YOU!

And the only things that really happen TO you, happen IN you. Banks may fail; jobs may cease; homes may break up; loved ones may die—and you think it makes a lot of difference. But it doesn't. The only thing that makes any difference is how you, yourself, take these happenings, IN YOURSELF.

LIFE IS AS YOU TAKE IT. LIFE IS WHAT YOU MAKE IT.

And since this is so, you needn't worry about Yesterday—the things you did and the things you didn't do. YOU CAN START RIGHT NOW AND MAKE LIFE WHAT YOU WANT IT—TODAY.

Grooming

Brush the Hair

Just what does the hairbrush do, in the way of preserving the miraute halo? It whisks away dust that has gathered during the day, and that's a good deed. It puts on the high polish that makes hair attractive. It removes those shafts that have served their time, are on the way to whatever heaven hairs go to when they die, giving a chance to new hairs to come along to keep the crop abundant. But brushing destroys the fresh laid marcel or water wave, and there's the rub. So do double time with the brushing when the undulation goes stink, and the topcrest is ready for the shampoo. After the brushing, maul the scalp without mercy.

Care of Gums

When using dental floss to dislodge particles of food that cling between the teeth, be careful not to saw into gums. Any wound is subject to infection, gums are particularly susceptible.

Why we say—

Keep going with PEP!

IF WE CAN CONVEY TO YOU a very little bit of the exquisite joy which we experienced last evening when we heard Ruth Posselt play her violin at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller, you will all be as happy as larks this spring morning . . .

Frail and sensitive as her instrument, Miss Posselt justified the faith placed in her by her friends and patrons . . . after 10 years of hard and faithful study (last season under the great artist, Jacques Thibaud), she appears before a select Boston audience as one of the most promising violinists of the world . . . if H. T. P. contradicts this, we shall still think so . . .

Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller

About 200 of the fashionable social set gathered in the Fuller mansion . . . early, of course, to have a pre-view of the magnificent paintings which grace the walls of this beautiful residence . . . let us say, that it was a grand privilege and everyone expressed the thought that Mr. and Mrs. Fuller were exceedingly generous to open their beloved art gallery for Miss Posselt's recital. They are swell folks, and you never hear of a good cause almost anywhere that their names, like Abu Ben Aden's, don't lead all the rest. They love their fellowmen . . .

Ruth Posselt is tall, willowy and Titian-haired, exceedingly pretty, with perfect poise and a winning stage presence . . . she played almost always with downcast eyes and when she gazed up the soul of music was smouldering there . . . a rare temperament . . . It is a privilege to have had a hand in her future . . . to have brought this talent to the world and the beneficent ladies who have had this vision are to be applauded also, especially Mrs. Franklin W. Hobbs, Mrs. William Dana Orcutt and Mrs. Fuller as well as others . . .

* * *

Mrs. Robert Treat Paine in White Lace

WE WERE SO ENRAPTURED that everyone in the music room looked beautiful to us as we gazed about . . . faces softened as she played . . . tight slippers and breathless "bras" were forgotten . . . no one seemed to care whether they were sitting beside Mrs. Robert Treat Paine or Susie, the sewing-machine gal . . . music made them all sisters under the spell . . . no mean achievement!

Mrs. Robert Treat Paine was there we hasten to tell you, looking very splendid in sheer white lace . . . she is one of the noticeably well-dressed women in any gathering . . . at the morning musicales her black street costume with silver foxes and white sailor hat was very chic indeed.

Another lovely lady present was Mrs. Daniel de Menocal in fuchsia crepe with cerise scarf . . . well suited to her dark eyes and clear skin.

Mrs. Fuller received with daughter Lydia in a green velvet with silver bodice, very stunning . . . Lydia wore black with bugle cape of black and white . . .

One of Boston's most charming ladies, Mrs. Alexander Steinert, who is always on hand to lend support and her gracious presence to things musical, wore a gold lame gown . .

* * *

Mrs. Marland Hobbs Wears Green

IN A STRIKING GREEN DULL CREPE with puff sleeves in stripes Mrs. Marland Hobbs attended with brunettely beautiful Mrs. Reed (Pussy) Anthony . . . her gown was of shaded blue velvet . . .

Mrs. Freeman Hinckley wore a very smart black beaded gown and Mrs. F. Stowe Bradley was also in the sable tones . . .

Olga Monks was striking in black with silver pins in her low coiffure and a silver-studded scarf . . .

In soft green crepe with golden sequin jacket, Mrs. Malcolm B. French came in with Mrs. Adolph Leeds in apple green taffeta, quite springlike . . .

Genial Mrs. W. H. Brennan wore simply cut black velvet with diamond clips .

Mrs. Richard Saltonstall, in black lace, brought one of the young members of her family, a sweet child of 12 or so she was in a simple black velvet frock with lace collar . . .

Others noted were Mrs. Horace Binney, Mrs. John T. Bottomley, Mrs. Morgan Butler, Mrs. Godfrey Cabot, Mrs. Wilmon C. Endicott, Serge Koussevitsky, Mrs. Nathaniel Thayer, Mrs. Alden Thorndike, Jean Sears, Mrs. Horace Morison and Nancy Morison, Mrs. George H. Monks, Mrs. Guido Perera and many others . . .

Jesus Maria Sanroma played with Ruth Posselt in two numbers, Chaconne by Vitali and Sonata for violin and piano by Cesar Franck, and he likewise received tumultuous applause . . . he is indeed a rare artist . . .

After the recital, Mrs. Fuller invited the audience to go to the dining room, where a delicious supper was served . . . in spite of 90 good resolutions to be nonchalant about creamed chicken and mushroom patties, ices and cakes, we fell . . . sometimes it is a satisfaction to fall in a good cause. Ladies must eat to live . . .

Ruth Back on Job Will Help Baseball Confirms Our Tip

Joe Conway Talks Of Braves and Sox Sees Happier Days

By JACK CONWAY

"I am glad to read Babe Ruth has agreed to sign a contract to hit home runs for the Yankees," said Joe Conway, the man who brought Bill Carrigan back to baseball a few years ago. "Jake Ruppert acted wisely in offering Ruth a contract calling for $52,000

Mr. Boston

"I was with Ruppert in St. Petersburg, Fla., last Sunday. The Babe was originally asking $60,000 a year, but had reduced his demands to $55,000. I suggested to Ruppert that he give Ruth the $55,000. I pointed out to Jake that the exhibition games had only been drawing from 500 to 700 persons, while a normal attendance with Ruth in the lineup would have been around 1500 to 2000.

"As Ruth and Ruppert were only $5000 apart I urged the Yankee owner to give Babe $55,000. The increased attendance in exhibition games would have made up the difference of $5000.

"Ruth and Ruppert were each very stubborn. Ruppert told me that Ruth's presence in the lineup did not mean two extra customers in the ball park. Now that he has cooled off I believe Jake will agree with me that this was a very ridiculous statement.

"The salary controversy between Babe and Ruppert has delayed the training activities of the home run king. Ruth has played a great deal of golf, spent many hours fishing, but has not played much baseball. He has been particularly neglectful of batting practice. The Yankees will start north next week and Ruth will not have as much opportunity to practice as he would in St. Pete.

"With Ruth out of the lineup, the Yankees exhibition games have lacked public appeal. People would come into St. Pete, and as soon as they found out Ruth was not in the lineup they would leave for other places.

"The salary dispute will not tend to increase Ruth's spirit. Neither will the one-year contract. In tight spots Babe will unintentionally favor himself. That is human nature. He will wish to prolong his baseball life as much as possible."

The agreement for the signing of Ruth was not a surprise to the readers of this column. I was first to give the information to the public that Ruth would take a heavy slash in his salary, and that he would sign a contract at St. Pete after the customary amount of ballyhoo. Babe and Jake have proved I had the "inside" angle on "The Great Baseball Holdout."

Red Sox, Braves Have Much Potential Strength

It is interesting to get Joe Conway's opinion of the new Red Sox as he was one of Bob Quinn's "right eyes." In fact, I have at on very good authority Joe advanced money to the Sox on several occasions.

"I like the new Red Sox," said Joe. "When Bob Quinn stepped out as owner he had a feeling he had a winning ball club just around the corner. I think Bob was right.

"I visited the Sox at Sarasota, Fla. Marty McManus has the team hustling. He is getting good fielding, fine hitting and splendid pitching. I was particularly impressed by the pitching of Henry Johnson, formerly with the Yankees. Eddie Collins has assumed a 'hands off' policy. He is per mitting McManus to run the ball club. Collins will be wise if he continues this policy. Eddie should do what he can to get new players, but he should let McManus have full charge of the running of the team on the field. Otherwise things will crash. The Sox have plenty of possibilities.

"I thought the Braves looked impressive during their training sessions. Bill McKechnie is a wise baseball man. He thinks baseball 24 hours a day. I dropped in on him one night and found him studying baseball charts.

"I liked the playing of Richard Gyselman and Albert Wright. Coast League youngsters. These boys are great in the field, and also take a good cut at the ball.

"You will not go wrong if you place a wager that Red Sox and Braves finish at least in fifth place. I would not be surprised to see each club do even better."

Joe's opinions should give cheer to Boston fans. They are from a man who has been close to baseball, and who knows what it is all about.

Nick Lutze Opens Training Here for George Bout

Nick Lutze of Southern California has started training in this city for his world's heavyweight championship wrestling bout with Ed Don George which will be held at the Boston Garden a week from Friday night. Lutze would be champion today if Referee Sam Smith had not been knocked through the ropes in his last tussle with George. Nick pinned George while the referee was trying to recover from the effects of a solar plexus punch.

MOODY BATTLES HUNT AT ARENA TONIGHT

'THUNDERBOLT' OUT TO KAYO OKLAHOMAN

Arena Program

FOUR ROUNDS
Dick Maloney, South Boston, vs. Joe Jankowski, Salem.
Mal Chase, Scituate, vs. Chester Lanier, Cambridge.
Johnny Hines, Roxbury, vs. Alex Weradt, Taunton.
Pinto De Sa, Portugal, vs. Jerry LaMontagne, Rochester, N. H.
SIX ROUNDS
Nap Proulx, Taunton, vs. Charlie Longo, Boston.
EIGHT ROUNDS
Al Silva, Cambridge, vs. Joe Delmont, Roxbury.
10 ROUNDS
Babe Hunt, Ponca City, Okla., vs. Bob Moody, Boston.

By JACK CONWAY

Bob Moody, called the "Black Thunderbolt" by Johnny Buckley, will toss his fists of iron at Babe Hunt of Oklahoma in a 10-round bout at an Argonne A. A. show at the Arena tonight.

Moody takes the place of the gigantic Jose Santa who has stood poisoning. Santa had a small pimple on his left thigh. It became septic and he was ordered to remain in a hospital.

RINGMEN FEAR MOODY

Moody originally fought out of Syracuse. He then came to Boston as a member of the Johnny Buckley stable. He is a six footer and weighs 206 pounds. His difficulty has been in securing suitable opponents. He is one of the best heavyweights in the country and nobody is anxious to meet him.

In a recent bout at the Arena, the "Black Thunderbolt" knocked out Walter Cobb. The latter is listed among the fistic dreadnaughts the New York athletic commission considers as fit opponents for Primo Carnera.

Hunt is in good condition for tonight's bout. He has been in training for a week for his proposed meeting with Santa.

BABE CONFIDENT

Babe proved he possesses plenty of confidence in his own ability when he agreed to step to bat with Moody. A win for Hunt may get him a shot with Larry Gains before the National Sporting Club in London.

The semifinal of eight rounds will bring together Al Silva of Cambridge and Joe Delmont of Roxbury. These youngsters scale around 147 pounds and aspire for honors in the welterweight division.

Nap Proulx of Taunton and Charley Longo of this city will clash in a six-rounder. There will also be four four-round matches.

Coin Likes Mooc

Jack Conway's famous magic coin today tipped the world that Bob Moody will win from Babe Hunt at the Arena tonight. The coin's 1933 record follows:

BOSTON BOXER N. Y. VICTOR

New York, March 23 (AP)—New York's amateur boxers proved too tough for the combined forces of Boston, Philadelphia, Worcester, Mass.; Providence, R. I.; Richmond, Va.; Chester, Pa., and Lynwood, Pa.

A team of 15 boxers, all candidates for National junior titles, met as many New Yorkers in an inter-city show at Madison Square Garden, last night, and only four of the visitors could win.

Two visiting 112-pounders got the best results. John Sullivan of Boston outpointed Edward Rauh, and Genero Golletto of Philadelphia defeated Ben Feuer. Peter Ruskowski, Worcester, belted Pete Qualles, New York heavyweight, to win the third decision for the invaders.

Boston Y Trackmen Race in Providence

Seven members of the Boston Y. M. C. A. track squad compete in the open meet at the Providence Y. M. C. A. this evening. Capt. Norman Anderson is in the 600 and 1000. Teaming with him in the latter event will be Stanley Wodoski and John Conroy.

Mervyn Little and Bob Pannier will enter the 200 yard run. David Kneeland will compete in the mile. John Edwards will compete in the running broad jump.

Stagg Drives Pacific Grid Squad in First Workout

Stockton, Cal., March 23 (AP)—Amos Alonzo Stagg went back to work coaching football here today, sending an eager group of 46 College of the Pacific athletes through their first practice under his direction.

With characteristic decision, the 71-year-old coach, who suffered an involuntary retirement recently as head coach of the University of Chicago, went into action on the gridiron less than 18 hours after he arrived here.

Stagg announced himself as pleased with the appearance of his squad, at the close of an hour and a half of intensive work.

NINE AMERICAN 'CHASERS SEEK AINTREE WIN

Aintree, England, March 23 (AP)—The 94th Grand National Steeplechase run here tomorrow over 4½ miles of green English turf by a field of thirty-odd high jumping horses, promises spectacular sport and perhaps an American victory.

Nine American-owned chasers are among the starters.

Two Americans have won the National in the last 10 years, Stephen Sanford, with 12-year-old Sergeant Murphy in 1923, and A. C. Schwartz with Jack Horner in 1926. Both horses were British bred.

J. H. Whitney's Dusty Foot and Mrs. C. S. Bird's Heartbreak Hill, probably are the best of the American-owned jumpers.

The other American owners and horses are: M. D. Blair's Ballyhanwood, F. Ambrose Clark's Chadd's Ford and Mrs. F. Ambrose Clark's Kellsboro Jack, J. A. Drake's big French leaper, Coup de Chapeau, a top chaser with a good record; J. E. Snow's Delaneige, and Jess Metcalfe Theras.

Three national winners will be in the going, Forbra, an outsider that won last year; Shaun Goilin and Delaneige.

Betting on leading horses is: Heartbreak Hill, weakening, 20 to 1; Remus, 22 to 1; Annadale and Delaneige, 25 to 1; Pelorus Jack, 28 to 1; Near East, Forbra, Merriment IV and Kellsboro Jack, 33 to 1; and Theras and Coup de Chapeau, 40 to 1.

If the weather is fine, 150,000 or more spectators will see the Grand National and most of them will pay at least a few shillings for the sight. The last free enclosure has been boarded up and fitted with turnstiles.

32 Colleges Seek Tank Crowns

New Haven, Ct., March 23 (AP)—A flock of swimmers many of them wearers of crowns won in recent sectional championship meets, converged on New Haven today, bent on annexing the even greater laurels at stake in the 10th annual collegiate athletic association championships.

Most of the six score entries from 32 colleges are slated to arrive during the afternoon in time for last minute workouts in the Yale pool.

The seven-man contingent from Northwestern University, holder of the 400-yard relay title, lost no time in getting acquainted with the scene of the championship struggle.

BROUILLARD PICKS CELLI

Leo Brouillard picked Tony Celli to win from Al McCoy in their eight-round bout at the Boston Garden tomorrow night after watching the Leominster youngster in action.

"Celli can punch," said Brouillard. "Anybody who packs as healthy a sock as Celli has a chance of defeating any middleweight. I would not be surprised even if Celli were to clip Johnny Indrisano on the chin."

Meanwhile McCoy, a terrific puncher, has won the approval of those persons who have seen him in action at his training quarters.

Billy Ames added another attraction feature to his card, when he induced Babe DeCosta, 160-pounds State amateur champion and diamond glove winner, to throw in his lot with the pros, and box tough Joe Silva from Taunton in a four rounder.

WASHBURN PINS BULL MARTIN

Gentleman Jack Washburn, having disposed of Bull Martin before 10,000 fans at the Arena, will continue his march to the roughneck championship meeting Pat McGill here next Wednesday night.

Washburn was around town today displaying a black eye and a patched forehead, but he has renewed confidence in his ability after coming from behind to best Martin.

Washburn lost the first fall in 5:46, but threw Martin out of the ring to win the second in 1:07. Martin was counted out. He went back for the final fall but was still dazed and Washburn pinned him in just 31 seconds for victory.

Benny Ginsberg and Rebel Bob Russell went 20 minutes to a draw in the semifinal. Three of the special bouts, Leo Papianos vs. Kewpie Kilroy, Harry Lundin vs. George Linnehan and Steve Kidd vs. Pat O'Hara, wound up in 20-minute deadlocks. In another special Middleweight Champion George Myerson threw Johnny Lopes in 13:41.

Other results: Jim Wallis defeated Kid Loury, 3-5d (Loury disqualified for strangling); Pete Sturges and Charlie Manoli drew; Mario Giglio and Eli Lux drew; Joe Wilcewski defeated John Maloney, 5-46; Nick Karavas defeated Jim DeVito, 6:00; Fred Moran defeated Earl Thompkins 7:14.

TOPPINO LOSES TO METCALFE

Hamilton, Ont., March 23—(AP) Ralph Metcalfe has strengthened his claims to the "Fastest Human" title by equalling his own world indoor record in the 60-yard dash and vanquishing Emmett Toppino, for the second time in succession.

Metcalfe, winner over Toppino at Toronto, Tuesday, repeated in even greater style here last night. He sped over the boards in 6 1-10 sec. Toppino finished only four inches back, barely ahead of Bert Pearson, Canadian champion.

Glenn Cunningham won the half-mile invitation, when Phil Edwards, Canadian Olympic star, fell 35 yards from the finish, when he was so feet ahead.

Reds Down Eagles in Can-Am Duel

New Haven, Ct., March 23 (AP)—The Providence Reds experienced little trouble in defeating the New Haven Eagles, 5 to 1, in a Canadian-American Hockey League contest.

With Maury Roberts, their regular goalie, on the sick list, the Reds were pressed. They went scoreless during the first two periods, getting their single tally late in the third after the Reds had piled up a five-goal lead.

Tufts, Brown, and Harvard, the three institutions whose matmen took most of the crowns in the New England championships, have entered their titleholders.

Hoppe Adds Lead in Big Cue Conflict

Chicago, March 23 (AP)—Willie Hoppe, veteran New York billiards wizard, today had stretched his lead over Welker Cochran of San Francisco in their 600-point match as three cushions, to 21 points.

Cochran has won four of the six blocks, but has failed to maintain his pace after reaching the 300-point mark.

Up Diamond Ladder With Eddie Collins

By GEORGE UNDERWOOD

CHAPTER XVI

A black year in the history of baseball, 1919. A year in which the spotless white pages of the game was besmirched by the biggest blot in baseball history. The year of the White Sox World Series scandal that rocked the baseball world to its foundations. The year the White Sox became Black.

Eddie Collins was captain of the White Sox—but not of the Black.

Out of the slime and crookedness and the filth of fraud that sullied and blackened the records of seven of the Sox players Collins emerged with his shield shining bright and his record as spotlessly white as when he had entered baseball thirteen years before.

It is a credit to the spotless reputation of Collins, his innate honesty and the respect and admiration he universally was held that, despite he suffered a batting slump in the series in which the whole world looked askance at, not a single finger of suspicion was pointed at the White Sox captain.

SPOTLESS REPUTATION

The whole world knew his batting weakness was not feigned, the fielding mistakes he made were honest ones.

In three world's series Collins batted better than .400. He hit for .429 in 1910, .421 in 1913 and .409 in 1917.

In two world's series Eddie suffered the inevitable slump that comes to all stars. He only batted .214 against the Braves in 1914 and was but 12 points higher in the series against the Cincinnati Reds in 1919, when he batted .226.

Collins came out of his slump in the White Sox-Reds series of 1919 in time to lead the honest members of the White Sox in a gallant but futile rally against their dishonest mates and the Reds in the last two games of the series.

In desperate endeavors to pull the brand from the burning, Collins batted .500 in the seventh game and .400 in the eighth. But the series was "fixed" and all of Eddie's gallant efforts were for naught.

EDDIE WOULD FORGET

It is written in the baseball chancelleries that the Cincinnati Reds won the World Series of 1919 from the Chicago White Sox 5 games out of 8. Collins and the honest White Sox players might have beaten the Reds. But it was beyond them to beat the dishonest mates, who double-crossed them.

"The White Sox scandal of 1919 is something I would like to forget," says Collins. "It shook my faith in mankind as never before or since. The goods who threw the series in 1919 were murderers. They sent two of the greatest friends baseball ever had, Ban Johnson and Charlie Comiskey, to their graves.

"Neither Johnson nor Comiskey were the same after the catastrophe. Comiskey's heart was broken by the treachery employes who double-crossed him. Johnson was a changed man after the successful assault upon the honesty of baseball, which he loved as he loved his life."

It is to the eternal credit of Ban Johnson and Charles Comiskey that they ignored the findings of the acquitting Cook County grand jury and banished the White Sox culprits from the game forever.

(To Be Continued.)

N. H. Race Betting Bill Is Held Up

Concord, N. H., March 23 (AP)—Gov. John G. Winant, in a message to the State Senate, today had asked that the bill to legalize betting on horse races be referred to the Supreme Court to determine the constitutionality of a tax on admissions.

The governor said he believed the legality of an admission tax should be determined before the Senate acts on the bill.

HUSKY MOUND STAFF STRONG

James Denton, lefthander from Concord, bids fair to become Northeastern's best southpaw hurler since the days of Ray Richardson.

Denton has been a member of the Husky jayvee squad for the past two seasons. Working out in the cage this spring he has impressed Coach Al McCoy.

Francis Kins, southpaw from Roslindale, has also caught McCoy's attention.

Should Denton and Kins fulfill present indications, Northeastern will have a strong pitching staff. Herbert Gallagher, Guy Milbrandt, Charles Letourneau, William Barth and Donald French are able hurlers.

Browns Sole Club Minus a Pennant

By BILL CORUM

West Palm Beach, Fla., March 23 (US)—Well, those horses at Tropical Park finally got it all my mother always told me to beware the hides of March—and here I am in West Palm Beach. West Palm Beach is close to Palm Beach. Only a small body of water, a few million dollars and the social register separates the two places.

Folks in West Palm Beach look through to Palm Beach through telescopes, and those in Palm Beach look back through tangerines. It's hard to see through a tangerine. The Duxeels and the Biddles play baseball on one side of the river here and the St. Louis Browns play on the other. The Browns are on this side.

Unless you are an unusually close follower of baseball you may not recall the St. Louis Browns but take my word for it that they are still in the American League.

When I was young I used to dream of the day when the Browns would win a pennant. Now that I am old I have put childish thoughts behind me.

The Browns are the only major league club in modern baseball that has never won a championship. At least they are different.

It's hard to figure the Browns. Owner Bill has spent and kept on spending until the more he has spent the worse his teams have seemed to get. So this spring he has thrown the whole affair open. He cut expenses to the bone at the outset.

Since that time I believe the squad has picked up one drop-in, Hal Schumacher, Giants' cast-off, named Russell White, out of Newark, N. J., via Georgetown. He pitches, at least that his story, and he's down here stuck with it.

Another unusual thing about this Brown team is that it came into camp with a regular for every position, and no questions asked. Usually one job is ordinarily a battle for a berth anywhere along the line.

Barring an accident or sickness the Browns will go to the post with Jim Bottomley behind the plate, Irving Burns at first, Oscar Melillo at second, Jimmy Levey at short and Jimmy Schumacher at third. The only utility infielder is Lindel Stortz.

SCOT IN RIGHT FIELD

Burns is an Irishman, Melillo is Italian, Levy is Jewish and Schaerin, German. Only a Polish baseball could scratch a hit through such an infield, but to make things doubly safe they have a Norman hocking them up in right field.

The Scot's name is Bruce Campbell and he holds home runs to triples, triples to doubles and doubles to pitouts at second base. He is fast afoot and is going to be the team's cleanup hitter, replacing Goose Goslin, now returned to home pastures along the Potomac.

To go along with Campbell in the outfield for the Brown Cubs will be Carl Reynolds and Sam West.

In the matter of pitchers the Mound City Brown boys are not badly off. Kilsfer is figuring on using five regulars, namely and to wit: Dick Coffman, George Blaeholder, Bump Hadley, Lloyd Brown and a tiny little fellow of some 210 pounds who answers to the name of John Henry Knott.

John Henry is a righthander out of Milwaukee with a record of 17 and 12, and Martin Haley says he can pitch. Martin knows more than I do about it, as out my John Henry on this, please Mr. Operator, and sound your A.

Tardy Retirement Leaves LaBarba With Eye Injury

New York, March 23 (US)—For 13 years Fidel LaBarba dodged the whistling missiles of the prize ring with rare success. He retired recently, partly because of his defeat by Seaman Watson, and partly because he wanted to quit while he was "all together."

He waited one month too long. Fate struck in the closing seconds of his brilliant career, and LaBarba, for the first time, is flat on his back with the blinds drawn.

An injury received in a training bout at the St. Nick gymnasium has weakened the retina in his left eye. It was incurred while he was preparing to meet Kid Chocolate for the featherweight championship, but it was not discovered until three months later.

Ross Earns Go For Title

Chicago, March 23 (AP)—Barney Ross, a youngster from Chicago's ghetto, has earned himself a chance at Tony Canzoneri's world lightweight championship.

By outpointing Billy Petrolle last night in the Chicago Stadium, Ross certified himself as about the best of the field seeking to dethrone the champion.

Ross didn't beat old Billy by a mile, but he did earn enough to convince the titleholder Canzoneri, who sat at the ringside and watched it.

"He's a good boy," the champion said. "I'll be glad to meet him."

Petrolle saved a $1000 weight forfeit by scaling 137½, a quarter of a pound under the agreement. Ross weighed in at the lightweight limit of 135 pounds.

"My Boy Franklin" -:- As Told by His Mother

he was tremendously amused, as were the others there, by the way I circumvented the "no visiting" rule. Several times each day I would climb a tall, rickety ladder, and, by seating myself on the top, manage to see into the room and talk with our small, convalescing scapegrace. He loved to see me appear over the window ledge, and, at first sight of me his pale, little face would break into a happy, albeit pathetic smile. He was dreadfully wan though, and so thin that a neighbor called him my little reconcentrado, a term applied in those days to groups of starving Cubans.

As a matter of fact, Franklin chose his school days to go through a whole succession of children's diseases, which his isolation at home had probably prevented his getting earlier. He had the mumps and also the measles, and the latter disability, trivial though it sounds, may truly have altered the course of his entire life.

War With Spain

It was at the time of the Spanish American War and, like all boys of his age, Franklin and his playmates were fascinated by the newspaper accounts and by their own dreams of heroism and adventure. I knew nothing of his enterprising schemes, of course, until some time later, but it happened that he and one of his boon companions became constantly imbued with the bellicose spirit that they planned to run away from school and enlist. I suppose every boy is subject at least once in his life to the temptation of breaking away from his established habits and the ties that bind him, but, as far as I know, this was the only time Franklin yielded to that adolescent weakness. As in all things he was thorough in laying the plans, which would undoubtedly have succeeded in his plot had it not been, as I have said, for that providential lack of measles.

He and his partner in crime had arranged by what devious means I can only imagine, with the local pinmaster, a familiar figure at the school because of his frequent visits—to smuggle them off the grounds safely stowed away in the little cart which a fat, indolent horse trundled from place to place. No one would have thought to look inside it, so well known was this community character. As the boys had saved up their pocket money for weeks in anticipation of this journey to the Spanish Main, they would probably have been miles away before their absence was discovered and, because they were both unduly tall for their ages, might easily have been enlisted and bearing our navy's battle-flag could have been taken to stop them.

Halted by Measles

But on that fateful morning, as luck would have it, they awoke with sore throats, running noses, and splitting headaches, and became once more, through the simple phenomenon of physical discomfort, two small boys who had been temporarily lost in the adult realm of martial glory. To add to their humiliation came the diagnosis that the maladies that had them in low was nothing more impressive than old-fashioned measles, an ailment hardly appropriate to the newly-assumed role of soldier of fortune. This crowning insult ended Franklin's early military ambitions, and his school career continued uninterrupted by any further contemplated deeds of valor, to end in a solemn and touching graduation ceremony which his father and I attended.

There was a great temptation to coddle Franklin after each of several illnesses he had just been through. I should have liked either to have brought him home for an indefinite stay or to have made frequent visits to Groton to satisfy myself that everything was going along as it should, but I put the notion promptly behind me. Letters every week-end were unknown, and visits away from school stern-ly discouraged—not a bad thing, for the boys were comfortable, well-housed and fed, and there was no opportunity to hunger after Lips to the theater or to insist upon the other indulgences which modern boys demand—and usually get. We stayed away from the school for the same reason, and our rare visits were all the more welcome because we made them an occasion

Wrote Regularly

But that meant that Franklin had to write regularly, which he did painstakingly and conscientiously, once a week. I either had that on the whole he was very good about it, for it could not have been easy at all times to search for rather scant news that went into some of those weekly efforts. A schoolboy's life is monotonously lacking in sentiment and sense, but in all fairness I cannot recollect any complaint when either in Franklin's. His letters were short and to the point, but had character and sparkled like him. They did not, I must admit, give any intimation of the enthusiastic correspondent he was to become in later years. They say that few public men conduct anything like the personal correspondence which Franklin has enjoyed almost ever since he has held office, and no amount of persuasion has ever succeeded in making him abandon the practice of sending his own mail even in the face of the most exacting official duties.

It has happened that his close contact with his mother has always been a source of pride and a little embarrassing—to one of the younger members of the family at least. I remember that once when Franklin came home at the noon hour for a hurried luncheon with his family at the Executive Mansion in Albany, he drew from his coat pocket and brandished most ostentatiously a typically feminine and delicately scented letter. To his eye was the twinkle which always meant that mischief was brewing, but he began to talk very solemnly.

"I received a most interesting letter this morning," he stated, smoothing out the pale-blue sheet of paper before him.

I thought there was a growing air of tension somewhere about the table as Franklin continued.

"Really, a most unusual letter. It is from 'Dear Rosey,'" he read impressively, but got no further, for Franklin, Jr., aged 17, and as tall as his father, was out of his chair and around the table faster than any one knew could follow him. When the hubbub had died down, the letter was safely stowed away in young Franklin's pocket, and my son's air of innocent surprise had dissolved in peals of hearty laughter.

Class Leaders

As time went on we heard less and less of Franklin's pranks at Groton, and received the final Harvard examinations in the offing, and, while he was never a boy to cram, he had every hope of making a decent showing. Once the sixth form had been reached the scholastic exactions of the various students had made itself fairly evident. There were six boys who consistently maintained a lead in their studies, and I must admit to a certain understandable elation over the fact that Franklin was always among them. There were Edward Bell, Krumbaar of Philadelphia, Wendell Phillips Blagdon of New York, William Appleton Burnham and Warren Motley of Boston, and Lathrop Brown, who later became Franklin's roommate at Harvard. Of the thousand applicants from the various preparatory schools who took the tests, each of these boys emerged near the top of the list with conspicuous honors; their mark, I believe, being fifteen hundred. Franklin headed the grade with sixteen "points," the best rating conferred, and one we were both proud of his achievement. He on the other hand, did not particularly relish this as the winning of the All-school Latin prize was of any special importance, but he was infinitely more excited over his breaking the school record for what they call the "running high kick" and establishing one at seven feet, three and a half inches that was to remain unshattered for years.

After the semester's exacting routine, Franklin always welcomed the approach of the summer holidays. Sometimes he attended boys' camps that were run in connection with Groton, but more often he spent his vacation at Campobello, the little island two miles off the coast of Maine, where we had a place at the shore of Welsh Pool, a tiny harbor off the Bay of Fundy. Aside from this rather primitive retreat that he used to embark on his nautical adventures, and how many of them I still remember!

In the next installment Franklin sets out with a chum on a cruise along the coast of Maine, seeking a buried treasure.

Daily True Story He Hated Women

GIRLS HAD always been just another of the trials put on earth for man to bear, until he saw Gloria.

"I'm telling you, Uncle Tommy," Glenn said when we were getting out of our steaming woolens and shoe packs and mitts, "that girl I saw on the slide this afternoon, that one in the green zipper outfit, with that fur ruff around the collar, and the tan fur tassel on her cap—"

"The one with the freckle on her nose?" I asked him.

"I couldn't see any freckle," he said back, "but she had those eyes and curly brown hair, and the kind of color that can come and go instead of the kind that always stays the same shade. And she had on shoe packs with white laces and white buck lacing on her mittens, and—"

"Son," I told him, "you sure did look her over. But I know who you mean. That's Gloria Kent."

A PROMISE

All-American half, this boy Glenn, and a baseball and track man as well. Due, one day, to run the business his father and I had built up, and figure divided requirements I started off how to spend unearned increment.

"Want to meet her?" I asked him.

"Do that for me," he said solemnly, "and I'll quit playing tomorrow and go down there in that stuffy old office and settle down to work."

Somehow I couldn't have asked for a better break. Gloria was the greatest girl in all the bunch that came to Malvern Smart, she was, and built like—well, even if I'm old enough for most of the non-rated youngsters to join Glenn in calling me Uncle, I'm still young enough to know that if the sculptors had seen Gloria first that Venus girl never would have had a statue standing in the Louvre.

Yet I had a sneaking hunch that some night soon a boat might lose in ultimate allure. For one solid week I kept stalling, making one excuse after another to evade that business of bringing the young pair together.

The night of the winter dance I couldn't help it, and when they floated off together I figured everything was set. I hadn't figured on Glenn's expecting to pre-empt her right away, and his going home in a huff because she happened to dance with some of the other lads at the camp.

And when ten days went by with that first meeting quarrel still in effect, I really began to worry some. Two nights more and we'd all be heading back to town, and these two super-proud youngsters kept on tilting their noses at the sky every time they met.

The last night we were there brought on a dance after a cross-country ski run and the girls and women were all in the portion of our shed-like old club cabin, changing from their heavier things. I happened to go out on the porch, and saw a skulking figure touching a match to a corner of the cabin. It blazed up like there had been enough kerosene poured on the logs to burn up another Rome. And I could hardly keep from calling out when the blaze of that quick fire showed me the firebug was Glenn.

But before I could do much of anything I saw him dart into the club, calling for everyone to get out—all but him, I can softly to two other figures that seemed to have been looking on "fair," it go a minute or two and then play fire department."

I followed around into the main door in time to see everyone scurrying out, and to see Gloria suddenly go down in a heap, and then clutch at her ankle. And then there was Glenn, picking her up like a feather, carrying her out to our car, and there wrapping her up in three or four extra fur robes. I went back to see about the fire, and as might have been expected, found it out. The logs were hardly even charred.

Of course that did it.

GO ON HONEYMOON

Then Glenn told me he was goin, to start to work with me as soon as we got back to town. He admitted, when I braced him with the fact that I'd seen him touch off the fire, that he'd planned all that with two of his pals, just to have some excuse to carry Gloria on that Glorious Gloria and have a chance to tell her how things were.

What I didn't tell him was that I'd planned my way out myself to do that very same thing, when he beat me to it.

And I didn't tell him that Gloria had told me, when we talked over the plan, that she'd pretend to sprain her ankle if she saw Glenn heading in her general direction.

It doesn't matter to tell it now, because they're on their honeymoon in the Chateau country in the south of France, and even if they were right here in town they'd be too busy with one another to read what gets in the papers anyway.

NEW ENGLAND'S GREATEST EVENING NEWSPAPER

BOSTON EVENING AMERICAN

THURSDAY, MARCH 23, 1933

LARGEST EVENING CIRCULATION BY MORE THAN 75,000

The Part of the Newspaper in a National Crisis

The banking holiday with its check on business and industry has been unsettling enough.

But how fortunate for everyone that there has been no moratorium on the publication of newspapers!

Their terse, accurate reports of swift-moving developments as the nation's leaders grapple with unprecedented problems . . .

Their ability to provide facts to combat fears . . .

Their great service in equalizing advantages of information that otherwise would be available to but a limited few by presenting all the facts—and their significance—to all the people as rapidly as events unfold . . .

These have served to calm public excitement, to crystallize public opinion and to inspire public confidence.

They contributed to the morale of the American people that earned the well-deserved tribute paid by Secretary of the Treasury Woodin when he said:

"I am stunned with admiration for the American people in this hour of crisis."

* * *

Suppose the newspapers, too, had been forced to suspend along with the banks. Just attempt to visualize the situation that would have resulted:

Complete paralysis of virtually all activity through lack of common contact between merchant, manufacturer, producer, trader and the public.

Stark fear, running rampant without contradiction by facts, involving all manner of consequences.

Malicious rumor wreaking havoc without effective opposition . . . unwittingly repeated for lack of news-gathering, fact-sifting agencies.

Leaders of the nation struggling in the dark against unknown conditions.

Opportunists preying on the rights of others, unhampered by fear of public exposure.

A pall of ignorance shrouding everything.

How tranquil the present situation by contrast.

* * *

A capsule-sized dose of such a situation as would confront the nation were the newspapers forced to suspend is offered in the recent experience of Butte, Mont., where local conditions forced the temporary shutdown of the two daily newspapers in the community.

An account of Butte's experience published in the September 10, last, edition of Editor and Publisher tells of the wild rumors that spread through the community with the suspension of the papers:

"One rumor spread through the town that a terrible murder had been committed in the suburbs.

"Another report carried the dismal tidings that the bonus men at Washington had blown up the White House.

"A third terrifying rumor, widely spread throughout the city, was to the effect that President Hoover had been assassinated.

"Crowds milled about the streets in front of the newspaper offices, reading brief news bulletins posted in the windows. Newspaper telephones rang incessantly as subscribers begged for stray bits of news.

"A messenger boy carrying exchanges from the post-office to one of the Butte newspapers was stopped by people on the street who offered as high as 50 cents a copy for the privilege of reading one of his papers."

* * *

America's newspapers have saved the nation from chaos, have thrown light on a baffling predicament, lent their services to victims of the financial tangle and the leaders working out its early solution.

They have enabled trade to continue, despite its unusual handicaps.

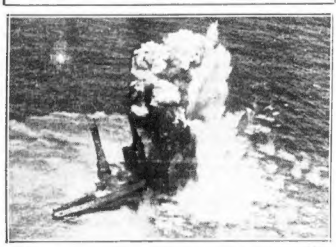
They have proved their inestimable value to merchant and patron alike, emphasizing their role of public servant.

They have spared no effort nor expense in keeping people abreast of the times.

There is the satisfaction of a job well done.

When a Bomb Hits

$50,000,000 Battleship Is Suddenly Worthless



TWO 1100-POUND BOMBS DID THIS

Intelligent readers know that wars to come will be settled from above the clouds. The fifty-million-dollar battleship is destined to hereafter be only a first-class TARGET for airplane bombs.

The other day the world learned something about fighting ships and airplanes. The Holland battleship, "De Zeven Provincien" and its mutinous crew surrendered when a bomb weighing only 100 pounds was dropped on the deck.

One tiny bomb was powerful enough to kill 18 men outright. Four others died later of wounds. The bomb injured 25 others and set fire to the ship.

This little picture shows what happened when two bombs, each weighing 1100 pounds, were dropped in a "test" on a United States ship.

Countries that have money to spend for self-defense should spend it on fighting airplanes and fighting submarines.

Hands Off Public Schools!

Supt. Campbell Warns of Selfish Economy

The public schools were described as "the front line trenches of American democracy" by Superintendent Patrick T. Campbell of the Boston schools in an address to the historic Bostonian Society.

The description is apt.

We are a democratic government in a republic.

The success of democracy rests upon the general knowledge and education of its citizens.

Education begins in the grade schools.

There it ends for the vast majority of our people, who do not get to college.

Democracy is always at war, to maintain itself against the attacks of powerful enemies who hate, loathe and despise it. Take a look at the map of Europe today, rapidly changing from one of democracy to various forms of autocracy.

Enroll the children in the schools, teach them to cherish their country and to appreciate the value of liberty, and they become life-long soldiers in the army of democracy.

For this very patriotic reason—the perpetuation of country—the schools of Boston, of Massachusetts and of the Nation should be kept to the highest pitch of efficiency.

Beware of these numerous schemes to impair or emasculate the schools under the spurious pretense of economy.

Warn the political payroll bandits, on the one hand, and the professional economists, on the other, that the public schools and public education must not be victimized by their selfish schemes.

Daily Bible Text "Watch ye. Stand fast in the faith. Quit ye like men. Be strong."
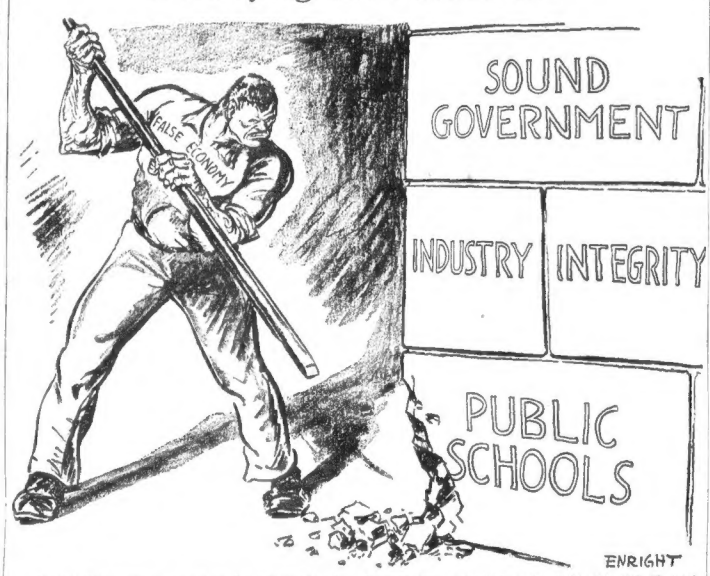
—I Corinthians xvi, 13.

By Rev. Katharine B. Ball, pastor Universalist Church, Oakfield, Me. Next text by Rev. George H. Spencer, Massachusetts Bible Society.

Destroying the Cornerstone



In 1930 approximately 63 cents per day was available in this country for the education of each public school pupil.

In 1933 approximately only 49 cents per child was provided.

Yet the responsibility of public education during the depression period has been greater than ever.

In the elementary schools there has been a fairly uniform increase of 200,000 children per year. High school enrollments increased from 3,750,000 in 1926 to 5,400,000 in 1933. The total enrollment in all schools increased nearly 1,000,000 pupils between 1930 and 1933.

Such conditions as these threaten a complete breakdown of the public school system, according to our ablest educators.

And a breakdown in the public school system means inevitably a breakdown in American citizenship.

Acting on the Jobless; America and Jews

By Claude G. Bowers

Author of "The Struggle for Democracy in America," "Founders of the Republic," "Jefferson and Democracy," "The Tragic Era" and other important works, now writing for the Boston Evening American.

THE FARM RELIEF BILL is coming in for the usual criticism where farm relief is concerned. Some have discovered that it is not in accord with Democratic principles. The answer to that is that it is an emergency and temporary measure to meet a serious crisis threatening the utter ruin of the nation's basic industry. There is another answer—militarism is not in accord with Democratic principles; but when we are at war, as in 1917-18, it was the Democratic principle to build a powerful army.

Another criticism is that it is intended to increase the price of farm products by governmental action. Well, we of the cities would starve in a month if the farmers ceased to produce the food that feeds us. At present the farmers' products sell for less than the cost of production. Of course we, of the cities, make a habit of working at a loss, and some of us cannot understand why we should pay enough for the food we eat to meet the cost of its production.

Claude G. Bowers

For a decade the government has done nothing effective to save agriculture. That is the reason there are 30,000,000 farm people out of the purchasing class. Because of the loss in the trade of these 30,000,000 people some millions of factory workers are in the street. If these 30,000,000 can be restored to the purchasing class, vast numbers of jobless city workers will go back on wages and return to the purchasing class.

Now an experiment, frankly described as such, is to be made. One thing is certain: If we of the cities imagine the farmers are going on forever working from dawn to dark to feed us at a loss, we must be a bit off in common sense.

Problem of the Jobless

With that measure pending, and demagogues and partisans busy trying to array the city against the farm when common sense and justice demands that their mutual interest be recognized, President Roosevelt goes to Congress on the problem of the jobless. Another brief, concise, clear message that any child can understand.

He asks authority to proceed at once to the creation of a civilian conservation corps to confine itself to forestry, the prevention of soil erosion, flood control, etc., that can put a quarter of a million of jobless men to work. The work these men do will be in harmony with our national policy and permanently add to the health of the nation.

There is a second item in the presidential program:

He reports that the money available for grants to states for relief work will be exhausted in May, and he asks a further appropriation before the session ends.

Here again we have decision, determination, courage, and a bold facing of realities. It is the first time since the streets began to fill with men eager to work and denied their right to work, that the head of the nation has acknowledged a duty on the part of government.

And that is making progress.

Mistreatment of Jews in Germany

But in the midst of our own problems the world scene flashes upon us, and America is uneasy because of the threatened persecution of the Jews in Germany under the new Hitler regime. American mass meetings protest; distinguished Americans, not Jews, join in the protest; Rabbi Wise discusses the situation in Washington; and the state department asks the American embassy in Berlin for a full and exact report.

One thing is perfectly clear—the mistreatment of an American Jew in Germany becomes the business of the American government.

Twenty years ago the United States Senate abrogated a treaty with Russia because of the Jews. The persecution of the Jewish people there had long been proverbial. There was nothing we could do about that; any more than Russia could do anything about occasional lynching of Americans here.

But American Jews were mistreated in Russia and refused to full status of Americans traveling there, and upon that fact, as we understand, the Senate abrogated the treaty.

Protecting Jew in Foreign Country

For many years America has been embarrassed from time to time by the Russian treatment of the Jews and of American Jews in Russia. When Pinkos, an American crew, was ordered out of the country forthwith because of a scrap in which he was not even charged as implicated, William M. Evarts, our Secretary of State, made vigorous protests and solemnly warned that if he was being persecuted because of his religion "he would be justly entitled to make reclamation for the damage and loss to which he might thereby be subjected." The result was that Pinkos was not molested.

When the matter of recognizing Roumania was pending in the days of Evarts, an attempt was made by him to secure assurances as to the treatment of the Jews and the Prince was informed that "This government has ever felt a deep interest in the welfare of the Hebrew race in foreign countries, and has viewed with abhorrence the wrongs to which they have at various periods been subjected by followers of other creeds in the East."

Pressure of Public Opinion Would Aid

More can be done, perhaps, by the pressure of public opinion to save the Jews in Germany from persecution by government than in any other way.

The reaction of mankind ought to give pause to the persecution threatened. That, too, is a realization that Germany owes much to the genius of the Jew in business, banking, shipping, literature and art.

The friends of Germany hope to find that the incidents which so have aroused the world have had neither incentive in, nor sanction of Hitler and the government, and that they represent nothing more than the unintelligent frenzy of an irresponsible mob which promptly can and will be brought within bounds by the strong arm of government.

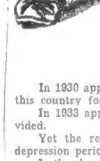
Chat of the 400

NEW YORK, March 23—Ten years ago, New York had a dozen weekly and monthly shakedown journals devoted to chit-chat of The 400. Most conspicuous, until its publisher Col. Mann, fell afoul legal reprisals, was the now forgotten Town Topics. It kept philanderers on constant edge.



O. O. McIntyre

Even though brightly informative of social goings-on, the majority existed on polite blackmail. As a prelude to the holdup, a proof of a proposed article was submitted to the victim, lifting the curtain on the inevitable family skeleton. A stock subscription or page ad "killed" the piece.

So far as I know, there are none of the high-jackers left. Indeed, even the more reputable have dwindled, until, before the market smash, only three were printed. The information such festilents spread now done more expertly and accurately by society writers on daily newspapers.

Cholly Knickerbocker is Maury Paul, a Social Registerite, and Billy Benedick is Baron Wrangel. Madame Flutterbye is of the upper social realm and many other pseudonyms are bona fide members of the Gold Coast's elect. All know whereof they speak and are unbribeable.

Frank Tinney idles most of his time, while not rocking at a window, warming a bench in the park near his Philadelphia home. Improved in health, but not entirely recovered, he reads Variety, weekly, for news of those of the theater he knew in other days. Much of the cross-fire comedy of today originated with Tinney. His habit of talking to the orchestra leader developed the stooge.

* * *

I used to like Tinney's story of the colored cook impounded for beating up another woman. When Tinney called at the jail, he asked her what she had done. "I didn't do nuffin', Mr. Tinney," she explained. "But I jes' natcher'ly can't control myself when a lady comes at me with a brick."

The most insufferable behavior in public I ever witnessed, was by one of those reduced duchesses in a theater one evening. She insisted on ring her Shropshire pedigree during a tense death scene until the audience turned on her with hisses.

Thingumbobs: William Glacken, father of American illustrators, has the artistic hands of a girl . . . Karl K. Kitchen is in South America for a series of newspaper and magazine articles . . .

During the Floridian holiday of the New York artists and writers, Rube Goldberg, on a round of golf, suddenly screamed, from a morass of palm trees: "Hey, caddie, never mind the ball. Find me!"

Service

To prove their wisdom and their strength
They builded pyramids of old,
But long ere time had run its length
The things were stark and still and cold.

To God they raised both tower and spire,
And lavished on them wealth and skill,
Lit adoration's incense fire,
But round the steps are beggars still.

By tedious toil the stones were piled,
At frightful cost were temples made,
Yet many a mother of a child
Looks out on life and is afraid.

I wandered through the ruins grim
And in my mind the fancy ran
That God's best love must go to him
Who labors for his fellow-man.
